The PURPOSE of this BOOK

TO PRESENT the reader with a systematic procedure for selecting a memorial; to submit factual information concerning the facilities, experience and reputation of the Presbrey-Leland organization and to assemble in book form a directory of more than 30,000 Presbrey-Leland Memorials throughout the United States,—these constitute the threefold purpose of this book.

The article entitled "How to Select a Memorial" is a concise explanation of the method employed by the Presbrey-Leland Studios in leading patrons step by step to a logical and intelligent choice of a design adapted to the site, appropriation and requirements. The illustrations which accompany this article embrace examples of every current type of Memorial from the simple marker to the costly Mausoleum.

In the first ten pages of the book some interesting facts concerning the Presbrey-Leland organization have been assembled for the general information of the reader. Illustrations of the studios, galleries, quarries, general works and construction equipment are presented together with a list of well known families, architects, sculptors and institutions which the organization has served during the past quarter century.

A complete directory of Presbrey-Leland Memorials and patrons throughout the United States has been compiled to aid the reader in locating examples of work done and to assist him in finding relatives, friends or acquaintances in various parts of the country who have patronized the Presbrey-Leland Studios.

The
STVDIOS and GALLERIES
of PRESBREY - LELAND

THE general offices, galleries and draughting rooms of the Presbrey - Leland Studios occupy the entire tenth and a portion of the ninth floor at number 681 Fifth Avenue, New York City. A permanent exhibition of original drawings, photographs and scale models of Memorials and Mausoleums is on free view in the galleries, affording the public an opportunity to study suggestions and values without the intrusion of salesmen or solicitors. The gallery is open daily, except Sunday, from 9 A. M. until 5 P. M., Saturdays until 1 P. M. Exhibits of Memorials ready for immediate placing in the cemetery are maintained at the Kensico and Woodlawn branches.

The PRESBREY-LELAND QUARRIES

WHITE Dummerston, the Presbrey-Leland Granite, is quarried at West Dummerston, Vermont. The Company's property occupies a tract of some two hundred and sixty-five acres, producing America's permanent white granite. Official tests by the United States Bureau of Standards rate Dummerston among the granites with the highest crushing strength and lowest absorption. (See page fourteen.) The families of two Presidents have specified Dummerston granite. While Presbrey-Leland Memorials are done in every medium used in the art of working stone, the entire output of the Dummerston Quarries is used exclusively by the Company.

GENERAL WORKS of the PRESBREY-LELAND STVDIOS

SITUATED in the center of the New England granite district the General Works of the Presbrey-Leland Studios at Brattleboro, Vermont, are equipped with every modern facility from one of the three largest granite-working saws in the world to a machine shop in which tools are made. A colony of artisans in stone here ply their craft under ideal working and living conditions, sharing in the earnings of the organization and zealous of the reputation it has earned for superior craftsmanship in stone. Supplementary shops are maintained at Hartford, Conn., Valhalla, N. Y. and in New York City.

PRESBREY-LELAND CONSTRUCTION EQUIPMENT

MOTOR-DRIVEN derricks, a fleet of large trucks and all the modern equipment essential to efficient and economical construction work are owned and maintained by the Presbrey-Leland Studios. A corps of expert granite and marble setters are in the exclusive and permanent employ of the Company under the direction of experienced foremen and a general superintendent of construction. Leading architects and officials of cemeteries throughout the country endorse the facilities, the exacting workmanship and the personal supervision maintained by the construction department of the Presbrey-Leland Studios.

INTERESTING FACTS AND FIGURES CONCERNING THE PRESBREY-LELAND STVDIOS

VER 30,000 Presbrey-Leland Memorials have been erected during the past quarter century.

Over 1,300 communities in the 48 States, the District of Columbia and 7 foreign countries are represented in the Directory of Patrons.

More than 1,300 mausoleums have been erected by the Company, ranging in cost from less than $5,000 to $1,250,000.

America's leading architects and sculptors of international reputation are patrons of the Presbrey-Leland Studios.

As an organization of designers, quarriers, manufacturers and builders the Presbrey-Leland Studios offer a comprehensive, efficient and economical service unique in the art of working stone.

The Director of Design and his Staff, in charge of the Studios, are registered architects of exceptional academic training and experience who are specialists in the design of Memorials and Mausoleums.

The Presbrey-Leland Quarries at West Dummerston, Vermont, produce America's whitest non-staining granite, described in Bulletin 404 of the U. S. Geological Survey. (See pages nine and fourteen.) This granite is exclusive with the Presbrey-Leland Studios.

The general works of the Presbrey-Leland Studios, equipped with every modern facility, are located at Brattleboro, Vermont, in the center of the granite industry of America.

The modest memorial costing less than $100 commands the same artistic supervision bestowed upon the more costly projects.

Presbrey-Leland service extends to all parts of the country through traveling experts associated with the Company.

A perfected service by correspondence is offered and especial attention is devoted to this department.

Presbrey-Leland Memorials are designed, quarried, executed and erected exclusively by the Company dealing direct with the public. There are no intermediate profits.

Photographs and original studies are mailed upon request. (See Page 27.)

THE PRESBREY-LELAND GRANITE — DUMMERSTON

HREE major reasons actuated the Presbrey-Leland Studios in acquiring the Dummerston quarries after an experience of more than a quarter century in the art of working stone: the singular whiteness of the granite which resembles marble, the extreme hardness and durability of the material and a fine texture which responds to the most delicate technique. The following extracts and reports are conclusive testimony in support of these facts:

"The greater strength of Dummerston is due to its slightly gneissic texture binding the grains together. * * * It has no allanite which is a dangerous mineral tending to produce discoloration." Dr. Thomas Nelson Dale, formerly of the United States Geological Survey.

"A compression test, made on a four-inch cube at the United States Arsenal at Watertown, Massachusetts, in 1905, showed the first crack at 308,000 pounds." Bulletin No. 738, United States Geological Survey.

"This fine granite, although probably harder than ordinary granites, may be found of economic value." Bulletin No. 738, United States Geological Survey.

HOW TO SELECT A MEMORIAL

Foreword

THIS article, together with the classified illustrations, explains the method used by Presbrey-Leland Studios in leading patrons step by step toward an intelligent selection of a Memorial adapted to the site, appropriation and other requirements. Much of the text has been assembled from lectures delivered by members of the Presbrey-Leland Studios at the Columbia University Extension Course in Commemorative Arts, 1925-6.

FINE ART IS THAT IN WHICH THE HAND,
THE HEAD AND THE HEART GO TOGETHER.

—JOHN RUSKIN

This Anglican Cross marks the resting place of John Ruskin in the churchyard at Coniston, Lancashire. The storied carvings on the front represent his notable works: The Seven Lamps of Architecture, Stones of Venice, the Modern Painter, and Poetry.

HOW TO SELECT A MEMORIAL

THE range of design in memorial art is unlimited. Books, catalogs, pamphlets, photographs, drawings and the vast accumulation of memorials in our cemeteries present a bewildering source of ideas and suggestions. The layman rarely has any previous experience to guide him. Nor is he often versed in memorial art—a specialized branch of architectural design. All too frequently he is confused by the conflict of opinion among those who would give him counsel and suggestions.

Obviously it is not wise to make a random choice —to adopt some design that may chance for the moment to appeal; for a disappointing result cannot be corrected save at great sacrifice. Moreover, once the memorial is erected it will remain forever not only as a tribute to the commemorated but also as a symbol of the culture and good taste of those who selected the design.

Sensible to these facts, mindful of the permanent importance of his decision and confronted by an unbounded source of ideas and suggestions, the layman is prompted to ask: What is the logical, the systematic procedure to follow in selecting an appropriate memorial?

The Method

The solution of the problem lies in the fact that the millions of memorials, ancient and modern, may be grouped into three classes according to function and into some ten types according to design.

Instead of attempting to consider the host of isolated or unclassified examples the layman should first select one class and one type for final consideration. And in selecting these there are three factors or "limitations" which largely govern his choice—the Site, Appropriation and Requirements.

It is the purpose of this article, and the classified illustrations in this book, to aid the reader step by step in selecting the class and type best adapted to the Site, Appropriation and Requirements.

I. The First Decision

According to function, all cemetery Memorials may be grouped in three major classifications: Mausoleums, Monuments and the so-called Individual Memorials such as markers, headstones and other forms designed to mark each interment as distinct from the family or central Monument. By selecting one of these major groups first, we largely reduce the range of choice at the beginning. Let us therefore consider the merits of each in proper sequence.

II. Mausoleum or Monument ?

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the function of the Mausoleum or to enlarge upon the consolation it affords in eliminating the ordeal of ground interment. Suffice it to say that where the element of cost is not a burden the Mausoleum is an investment in peace of mind. Properly constructed it offers a permanent and private place of sepulchre for the family—clean, dry and sanitary. It is at once a Memorial and a utility, rich in possibilities for architectural expression, however modest it may be in scale. While a philosophical attitude toward death prevails in America today, nevertheless the sense of security and protection attained by housing the sepulchres in a Mausoleum appeals to an ever-increasing public.

In deciding between a Mausoleum and a Monument the element of cost is a controlling factor in most cases. Needless to say, it is important to remember that a cheap and unsubstantial Mausoleum defeats the very purpose for which it is erected; and it is therefore a shameful waste of money and a menace to the cemetery. However inexpensive the building may be, it is of cardinal importance that no false economy be attempted in design, materials, workmanship and construction.

Granite Mausoleums vary in cost from approximately $5,000 upward. Such is the range in design, the variety and finish of materials, the types of construction, location and other variable factors that it is impracticable to establish any minimum figure. A two-crypt Mausoleum can be so designed that it will far exceed the cost of a building accommodating twenty. Again, there are small Mausoleums resembling sepulchral monuments or sarcophagi which may be erected for considerably less than the amount mentioned.

Contrasting these approximations with the cost of Monuments—which range in price from less than $500 upward—the reader can decide between a Mausoleum and some form of memorial. If the elimination of ground interment and other features of a Mausoleum appeal, then the reader should refer to the illustrations and text covering Mausoleums Plates I-XXI. If a Mausoleum is not to be considered then the next step is to decide between a Family Monument and the Individual Memorial.

III. Family or Individual Memorial?

The term Individual Memorials, it will be recalled, refers to memorials designed to mark the individual graves as distinct from the central or family Monument. The distinction is important because it is here that many unhappy mistakes are made.

Contemporary practice in both cemetery landscaping and memorial design gives preference to the use of a central Monument, subordinating the stones at individual graves. This is a departure from the old custom of erecting important headstones and Monuments at each grave. In most modern cemeteries the regulations now restrict the size of Individual Memorials in the commendable effort to avoid that congestion of stonework which in the past made God's Acre a depressing stone-yard.

While sorrow and sentiment often prompt the placing of an important Individual Memorial it should be remembered that once the precedent is established on a lot, it will invariably be followed in all future interments. Which means that ultimately there will be an unsightly accumulation of stonework. Hence the desirability of a single central Monument with low and inconspicuous markers of uniform design at the graves. This plan is not only more economical in the end but is decidedly more dignified and impressive in its uniformity and harmony.

To be sure, there are exceptions in which the Individual Memorial may be used. Where the precedent has already been established on a lot there is no alternative unless, as is often the case, the existing stone-work is replaced. Where this plan is not feasible and an Individual Memorial is necessary, care should be exercised to select a design that is harmonious with existing memorials on the lot. Still another exception applies to plots where only two or three interments are ever to be made. Here the Individual Memorial may be used without danger of excessive stone-work.

In conclusion, the dominant point to remember, in deciding between the use of Individual Memorials or a central Monument, is the ultimate appearance of the plot when all interments shall have been made. Individual Memorials are illustrated on Plates XXII-XXVIII. If this form is to be adopted the reader should refer to these illustrations and to the text which accompanies them describing the various forms which the Individual Memorial may take.

IV. What Type of Monument?

Assuming that the problem narrows down to the selection of a central or family Monument, the next step is to determine what type of Monument is best adapted to the site and the appropriation.

It will be recalled that all cemetery Memorials of whatsoever description, period or source, may be classified according to design into some 10 groups or types. And it is by considering these few well defined types instead of the innumerable unclassified designs, photographs and examples that we reduce the range of choice without confusion and uncertainty.

V. The Ten General Types of Cemetery Memorials

To facilitate the reader's comparison and study of types all the Monuments illustrated in this book have been grouped according to the following system of classification:

Tablets	Obelisks
Crosses, Cross Tablets	Columnar Monuments
Sarcophagi	Formal Garden Themes
Pedestal Monuments, etc.	(Sun-dials, Bird-baths, Vases,
Exedrae	etc.)
Screens	Sculptured Memorials

While various examples, large and small, of each type have been used in the illustrations, nevertheless the reader should not expect to find precisely the design that may appeal. Let us again emphasize the fact that the illustrations are intended to picture types and not individual examples. For when the reader has selected one or more types for final consideration, the procedure is very simple as hereafter explained at the close of this article.

VI. Factors Controlling Choice of Type

As we have observed, in selecting the type of memorial best adapted to the site and the amount to be expended there are certain factors or "limitations" which control an intelligent choice.

Important among these considerations are the appropriation, size and location of lot, number of interments to be made, character of Monuments in the vicinity, cemetery regulations governing the size and position of the Monument together with such factors as personal taste, religion (which may, for example, dictate a Cross) and some particular sentiment or association that may suggest an historic type of Memorial or some dominant symbolism.

In the effort to avoid a detailed discussion of these limitations and factors the cardinal points have been incorporated in the following series of suggestions and in the descriptions which accompany the illustrations.

VII. Suggestions for Selecting the Type of Memorial

(A) Give preference to the type that offers a contrast to Monuments in the vicinity. For example, if the memorials on adjacent lots are vertical in mass, individuality and contrast can be attained by adopting some horizontal form.

(B) Avoid types that are prevalent in the cemetery. For example, where there is a predominance of conventional sarcophagi and tablet forms—a condition common to most cemeteries—it is desirable to depart from a monotonous repetition by adopting some of the unusual themes such as the monolith, churchyard Cross, garden bench, memorial vase, pergola, stela, etc.

(C) Visibility of the Monument must be considered. Where a lot is situated well back from the roadway, with other Monuments intervening or obscuring the view, it is desirable to adopt a type that offers either sufficient height or length to be visible from the road.

(D) On hillside lots, or wherever there is a pronounced grade, it is important to avoid widespreading bases. Monoliths offer an ideal solution for such lots by eliminating the base altogether, thus avoiding the awkward effect of a high base on the low side of the lot and a buried base on the high side.

(E) Investigate any cemetery rules governing the size and location of the Monument on the lot. These rules are an important protection to you and to all lot-owners. They deserve to be respected in the letter and spirit. The Superintendent will furnish you with a diagram showing the location of present and future interments, indicating the area reserved for a Monument.

(F) Consult the Cemetery Superintendent. Remember that in most modern cemeteries the Superintendent takes pride in the landscape of which your lot is a part, and that memorials are a permanent feature of that landscape. The Superintendent will give you impartial and unbiased counsel. Often he is well versed in memorial art through constant association.

(G) Do not duplicate a Monument—particularly a Monument in the same cemetery. Imitation betrays lack of individuality and it is unfair to those who placed the original memorial. Encourage the adoption of a regulation prohibiting duplication. If some Monument in the cemetery appeals to you in design, or for some sentimental reason, use it as a basis for adaptation, not duplication.

(H) Where the Monument is to be placed in the center of a lot it is desirable to adopt some form that will not screen, obscure or minimize the importance of graves in the rear half of the plot.

(I) Remember that architectural dignity, simplicity and individuality are the essence of good design—and economy. It costs no more, often less, to adopt a design that is architecturally beautiful in proportions and correct in detail. The memorial costing less than $200 deserves the same, if not more, study than the costlier works. See to it that your advisors are trained in architectural design and that they have specialized in memorial art. Remember that the memorial is a problem in design—not a commodity. Consult designers—not salesmen.

(J) Avoid ultra-modern styles of ornament and novel effects. While it is not necessary to make a fetish of the historic styles, nevertheless it is wise to observe the unimproved traditions of the Classic, Renaissance and Gothic, however inexpensive the memorial may be.

(K) Communicants of the Roman, Anglican and Lutheran Churches—in which the Cross is a dominant symbol—should consider the Cross and Cross tablet in selecting a type. Indeed, the Cross is properly taking its place among the most favored of memorial form regardless of Christian denomination.

(L) Avoid the so-called rock-face surface. It is an artificial finish, neither artistic nor naturalistic. If the natural beauty of rugged unhewn rock appeals, it is better to use a field boulder and one untouched by the chisel.

(M) Avoid mere bulk of stone. It is better taste to err on the side of restraint than it is to burden the lot with a massive Monument. A simple classic stela can be more expressive and beautiful than a ponderous obelisk. Our cemeteries need more art —less stone.

(N) Do not select the material before selecting the design. Too often the curious notion prevails that some single brand of stone surpasses all other materials Nature has given us. Tests conducted by the U. S. Bureau of Standards and the U. S. Geological Survey are more scientific, convincing and unbiased than the sales-talk of those who confuse memorial art with the business of selling "granite." There are many good granites and good marbles. When the design has been adopted a material should be selected that will best interpret the design in texture, color and technique.

(O) If the cemetery regulations permit planting on the lot a reasonable sum for evergreens should be included in the amount appropriated for the Memorial. Shrubs relieve the stone-work and give a beautiful setting for the memorial. Consult the Cemetery Superintendent on this important feature.

(P) It is desirable to use only the family name on the central Monument, placing full inscriptions on the individual markers at each grave. This method, now generally followed, avoids many awkward situations, and eliminates all danger of any accident or costly mistake in carving future inscriptions.

VIII. Selecting the Type of Memorial

The reader should now turn to the illustrations beginning on Plate XXIX. These illustrations, it will be recalled, are classified according to type—tablets, Crosses, sarcophagi and so on. It is desirable first to proceed through the entire set of types, thus acquiring a general idea of the range in design and characteristics. Read the descriptive text carefully. These descriptions will often serve to reduce the range of choice by explaining the dominant features of each type. For example, sarcophagi and obelisks are essentially massive; the tablet forms are slender and graceful; the so-called garden themes are a departure from the funereal and in harmony with the modern cemetery landscape; Crosses are significant—and so each type has a peculiar characteristic which will influence the choice.

In comparing the types illustrated remember that it is the mass—the essential form and not the detail—that is important at this stage. Moreover only a limited number of examples can be shown of each type.

After proceeding through the entire set of types in order repeat the process, this time noting the type or types that most appeal.

IX. After Selecting the Type

When the type or types have thus been selected the reader is prepared to consider individual examples—to study the range of design in a given type. To facilitate this study the Presbrey-Leland Studios will mail a "Portfolio of Original Photographs" illustrating a variety of memorials in each group or type. The reader should write for portfolios illustrating the type or types he has selected. In writing for the photographs it is desirable to mention the size of the plot and to give any particulars that may be helpful in selecting photographs illustrating examples best adapted to the requirements. These portfolios are mailed upon request. There is no obligation except to return the photographs when they have served their purpose.

X. The Portfolio of Photographs

From the various examples of a given type, illustrated in the Portfolio of Photographs, the reader should select those that most appeal. Here again the reader should not expect to find precisely the design that will meet all the requirements. Often some feature in one example and some detail in another may need to be combined and adapted. Again, certain effects not shown on any of the photographs may be desired. Hence the importance of original sketches which incorporate the required elements and likewise illustrate the proportions and detail possible to obtain for a given expenditure.

XI. The Final Step

After considering and selecting the photographs in the Portfolio the reader should return them with comments. These comments will aid the designers in preparing tentative sketches which are submitted with accurate dimensions and estimates, incorporating the requirements and adapting the features, details and qualities that the reader has selected.

Thus the final design represents the culmination of a systematic and logical study of the Memorial as a problem in design.

Free Advisory Service

The procedure described above involves no obligation. It is part of the extensive service the Presbrey-Leland Studios have maintained for more than a quarter century. Moreover, it is contrary to the Company's policy to "follow up" inquiries with persistent or importunate attempts to urge the Company's services in any manner.

Mindful of these facts, the reader is invited to take every advantage of the Free Advisory Service maintained in the Presbrey-Leland Studios. The staff of designers, familiar with cemeteries in many parts of the country, will give prompt consideration and reply to all inquiries for advice and suggestions in both selecting a type best adapted to the site or in developing a final design.

Personal Service

Needless to observe, the selection of a design can be greatly facilitated by consulting a designer-representative of the Company in person. It will be seen, from the list of Presbrey-Leland memorials in this book, that the Company's service extends throughout the United States and that representatives of the organization are of necessity constantly traveling over many sections, particularly East of the Mississippi. Hence it is possible in most cases for the Company to offer the personal services of a designer-representative. In a single conference, after inspecting the site, one of these trained designers can leave data, suggestions and preliminary sketches of invaluable importance. Readers are invited to take advantage of this service which is available with reasonable promptness and without obligation.

STRUCTURES DESIGNED TO PROVIDE INTERMENT

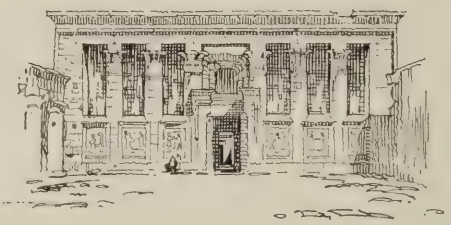
MAUSOLEUMS, SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGI AND COLUMBARIUMS

MAUSOLEUMS, as the name implies, are planned to provide a place of sepulture. They range in design from simple noncolumnar buildings, with rough hewn surfaces, to imposing adaptations of the Greek temple. A few typical examples are here illustrated together with underground tombs, columbariums and sepulchral sarcophagi. In Part II of the article "How to Select a Memorial," the reader will find some important observations on the function and cost of mausoleums. It is obviously impossible to here discuss the architectural and practical aspects of mausoleum design and the reader is invited to write for a Portfolio of Photographs and detailed information.

The Temple at Edfu typifies the solemnity and ponderous solidity of Egyptian architecture. See adaptation on page opposite.



"Earth proudly wears the Parthenon
As the best gem upon her zone."

MAUSOLEUMS ADAPTED FROM ANCIENT TEMPLES

Many Presbrey-Leland mausoleums are reproduced or adapted from ancient structures. This example recalls the Temple at Edfu illustrated on the page opposite. Egyptian architecture is peculiarly appropriate for mausoleum design, for the Egyptians were a nation of tomb builders and permanence of construction was their ideal. Imposing scale and mass are dominant elements of effect in the architecture of the Nile. L6424, designed and erected for the Estate of William Patterson, New Castle, Pa.

The Temple of Theseus, like the Parthenon shown on the opposite page, is one of the supreme achievements of Greek architecture and it is the prototype of this mausoleum by Presbrey-Leland. Academic training, travel and specialized talent enable the registered architects on the Presbrey-Leland staff to adapt the antique with scholarly regard for refinement and authenticity of detail. PC5850, designed and erected for E. H. Everett, Esq., Bennington, Vt.

MAUSOLEUMS ADAPTED FROM EGYPTIAN ARCHITECTURE

Dignity, strength and stability distinguish the architecture of Egypt, qualities essential to mausoleum design. In this building of moderate cost, Presbrey-Leland architects have omitted the typical Egyptian cavetto cornice and the columns in a modern adaptation that retains the essential qualities of the style. The roof is monolithic. L8830 for Miss Bertha Reifsnider, Akron, Ohio.

The more conventional treatment of the Egyptian mausoleum adheres closely to the temple in design, introducing the graceful cavetto cornice and the columns with capitals adapted from lotus or palm. The winged solar disc, emblem of the pagan sun god Ra, may be omitted although it is an important decorative feature of the Egyptian cornice. PL19350 for the Estate of Daniel Good, Buffalo, New York.

GREEK DORIC TEMPLE FORM—IN ANTIS AND PROSTYLE

Throughout the ages, Greek architecture has remained unrivalled in refinement of line and detail. The Doric temple distyle in antis, so called when the side walls extend to flank two columns, is a favoured prototype for the mausoleum of classic source and the building here shown illustrates this form at its best. TD5665. Designed and erected for Mrs. William A. Nash, Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, New York.

The prostyle temple features columns across the portico and when the columns are four in number the structure is tetrastyle. Mausoleums of this type predominate in our cemeteries as they did on the Via Appia in Rome and the Street of Tombs in Pompeii. In the example here shown all the refinements of the Doric entablature have been introduced with meticulous regard for detail. Erected for W. E. Boeing, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, Detroit, Michigan.

In the Ionic Order the Greeks achieved a supreme expression of refined elegance. Singularly, this style reached its highest development in the famous Tomb of Mausolus at Halicarnassus, from which the word "mausoleum" is derived. The mausoleum here shown recalls the Ionic Temple of Nike Apteros in Athens, which was designed by Callicrates, architect of the Parthenon. PC5522 for Jasper A. Campbell, Esq., Kensico Cemetery, New York

PROSTYLE TEMPLE FORM—IONIC AND CORINTHIAN

The Corinthian is the most elaborate of the Classic Orders. It was evolved from the Ionic and was first used by the Greeks on small decorative structures like the Choragic Monument of Lysicrates. The style was favoured and developed by the Romans. Mausoleums of the Corinthian Order are particularly desirable in cemeteries where the more severe Doric style prevails. PC7540, designed for Charles B. Manville, Esq., erected in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Classic architecture may be adapted in designing the mausoleum of moderate cost by modifying the detail, notably in the entablature. Obviously, such modifications involve that discriminating taste and judgment which come only with highly specialized training in architectural design. This mausoleum admirably illustrates the Doric prostyle temple modified in scale and detail by Presbrey-Leland. PL20555 for Moses and Louis Plaut, Esq., Newark, New Jersey.

PROSTYLE TEMPLE FORM—MODIFIED IN SCALE AND DETAIL

The Roman Doric Order, and the more simple Tuscan, are particularly desirable for mausoleums of moderate cost. The columns are lighter than those of the Greek Doric and they may be unfluted. These and other authentic modifications of detail afford legitimate economies in design, without impairing the architecture or construction. The Roman Doric was used in this mausoleum of modest scale. For Mrs. Marilynn Miller Carter in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Mausoleums of square plan afford a desirable change from prevailing oblong temple forms with pedimental roof. The square building usually features the stepped or pyramidal roof, monolithic in construction, thus avoiding the three-piece pedimental roof-stones. The architectural possibilities of the square plan are illustrated in this mausoleum. PL17320, erected for Walter P. Davis, Esq., Portland, Maine. Wm. Lawrence Bottomley, Architect.

The square plan, particularly when columns are omitted, leaves the designer free from the conventions which dictate the form and detail of the temple type of building. Costly entablature detail can be eliminated without sacrificing good design and the monolithic roof construction can be employed. Hence the desirability of the square plan for mausoleums of moderate cost. PL22115 for W. W. Flowers, Esq., in Durham, North Carolina.

SQUARE FORM—COLUMNAR AND NON-COLUMNAR—STEPPED ROOF

The imposing William Rockefeller Mausoleum is one of the outstanding monuments of modern architecture. Designed by Welles Bosworth, the structure with its engaged Ionic columns, enormous monolithic wall stones and the pyramidal roof is a notable example of the square plan in a structure of superb classic design. PL8295, erected for William Rockefeller, Tarrytown, New York.

Restraint and dignity are expressed in this mausoleum of moderate cost in which the square plan has been used with appealing results. The severity of plain walls is relieved by a pilaster-like break at the corners and a refined treatment of the cornice. Here again the stepped roof crowned with a single slab is used to insure water-tight construction. It requires resourceful design to attain simplicity without plainness. PL17777 for the Estate of Charles D. Barry at Kennebunk, Maine.

Sheer simplicity of design distinguishes this modern mausoleum of square plan in which the sole enrichment has been centered in the sculptured portal. Austerity has here been avoided by featuring a colorful polished granite for the exterior walls. Other important qualities are the chamfered corners, the band-like cornice and the stepped roof. PC8290, erected for Ernest Stauffen, Esq., New York City. Walker & Gillette, Architects.

SQUARE FORM—COLUMNAR AND NON-COLUMNAR—STEPPED ROOF

The recessed portico used in this mausoleum of square plan has attained a wide appeal in current memorial architecture. Obviously a modern variant of the temple in antis, this treatment varies from prototype insofar as the square plan eliminates the pedimental roof with its elaborate entablature. PL22464 for the Estate of Sanford Ross at Newark. New Jersey.

The dome, or, more accurately, the cupola, contributes monumental dignity to a structure and hence it has an important place in mausoleum architecture. Notable among the domed or domical buildings of antiquity is the Pantheon of Rome—Byron's "shrine of all saints and temple of all gods"—which was adapted in designing this mausoleum. The tomb of Dante at Ravenna is similar in form without the columned portico. L5432 for John Bindley, Esq., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Preferably used on larger mausoleums, the dome requires a quadrilateral, circular or multangular building. While the spherical roof long antedates the Renaissance, nevertheless it was then that the dome attained importance as an element of effect in architecture. Hence the Renaissance detail in this building with its interesting portal and columnated corners. PL22545 for Wilbert L. Smith, Esq., Syracuse, New York.

CIRCULAR AND SQUARE FORM—DOMICAL ROOF

The dome was a traditional feature in the architecture of the East and it became the dominant motif of the Byzantine style. The domical shrines and tombs of the East suggested this mausoleum adapted from the Egypto-Arabic and Indo-Moslem styles. The ornament is Cairene and minarets accentuate the Eastern influence of the design. PL22424 for Mrs. J. Gordon Edwards in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Enshrined in a picturesque setting of verdure, this mausoleum of octagonal plan with a dome-like roof offers a striking contrast to the conventional mausoleum. The roof resembles a cupola, but it is in fact a series of steps crowned with a small stone suggesting the oculus of a dome. Walker & Gillette, Architects. PL23445, William R. Coe, Esq., Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, N. Y.

The polygonal plan, almost an octagon, is used in this domical building of classic influence in design. The portico with columns and pedimented entablature is of Doric detail. Here again modern architecture has illustrated the possibilities for distinctive design in mausoleum building. PC5383, erected for Julius Stein, Esq., Woodlawn Cemetery, New York. Carrere & Hastings, Architects.

OCTAGONAL AND CRUCIFORM PLAN—DOMICAL ROOF

Four pediments on a building of cruciform plan here support a massive dome. Interesting indeed were the problems in stereotomy presented by the circular dome and the pediments which were cut from single blocks of stone in sections. A striking example of resourceful design by Charles Barton Keen, Architect. PL22750, erected for Mrs. Charles Corby, Washington, D. C.

OBLONG PLAN—CLASSIC AND NEO-CLASSIC DETAIL

Another departure from conventional mausoleum design is attained by placing the portal on the long side of an oblong building, thus utilizing the expansive wall for an impressive facade. This plan is particularly desirable when the width of the plot is greater than the depth from front to rear. The example here shown, PL20715, was designed for William H. Douglas ,Esq., and erected in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown, New York.

The oblong plan permits a more spacious naos or compartment in contrast to the narrow aisle of the usual temple type of mausoleum. And where sixteen or more interments are to be made, this plan is at once the most effective and economical. In this impressive non-columnar structure the walls are enriched with pilasters and sculptured bas-reliefs. PL20100, Trowbridge and Livingston, Architects, erected for Mrs Florence E. Dickerman, Greenwood Union Cemetery, Rye, New York.

OBLONG PLAN—CLASSIC AND NEO-CLASSIC DETAIL

In this mausoleum of oblong plan, erected in a sectarian cemetery, Presbrey-Leland architects have introduced shrines at each end of the structure. These shrines, with effigies of our Lord and the Blessed Virgin, repeat the motif of the portal with its columns and segmental pediment. The architecture is Renaissance; for the Roman Church has been a factor in developing this neo-classic style. PL18840 for the Estate of John Shields in Calvary Cemetery, New York City.

Here again the long side of an oblong structure is used for the facade. The recessed portico is enriched with coupled columns and monumental urns. The same motif with two columns is repeated on the ends of the building, attaining a rich play of architectural detail. The Georgian style was appropriate for this building in its New England setting. PL24000 for Mrs. H. W. Walker, Bridgeport, Connecticut.

There is a revival of Gothic Architecture in America and it is influencing the design of mausoleums. Traditionally the Christian and spiritual style, Gothic architecture is peculiarly appropriate for commemorative art. The style does not necessarily involve costly and elaborate detail for a building may be Gothicised with a few typical mouldings, cusped panels and a simple but authentic portal,—as in this example, PL18120 for Charles Luke, Esq., in Woolawn Cemetery, New York City.

GOTHIC AND GOTHICISED MAUSOLEUMS

Sentiment and significance may be expressed by designing the mausoleum to resemble a small chapel, —particularly when the form and detail are borrowed from historic Churches and Cathedrals of the old world. This lovely Gothic mausoleum, for instance, was adapted from the south porch of Biddestone Church in Wiltshire, an example of the Early English style. A noteworthy feature is the varied tooling of the ashlar or stones composing the walls. Interesting too are the quaint stepping stones and a picturesque landscape setting by Carl Pilat. Designed and erected for Mrs. George S. McAlpin, Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y. PL23720.

Here again the chapel has been used for a motive in mausoleum design. The facade is reminiscent of the East End of Chichester Cathedral, reared by William of Wykeham about 1390. Chapel-like mausoleums of this type have been variously adapted from ancient structures by adopting the apse, baptistery, sacristy, Galilee porch and other bays of medieval Churches and Cathedrals in England,—details of which are available in the Presbrey-Leland library of architecture. PC6605 for Mrs. Charles D. Fraser in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown, New York.

GOTHIC AND GOTHICISED MAUSOLEUMS

Interesting texture attained through resourceful masonry, notably in the use of varicolored stone, was studiously sought by the Cathedral builders of old. And in America we are reviving this quality in Gothic architecture largely through the use of picturesque seam faced granite with its warm and varied tones of buff and brown. Such is the medium used in this mausoleum with limestone trim and roof. PL18830 for the Estate of Emil Berolzheimer in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Hawthorne, New York.

In this modern adaptation of the classic temple type of mausoleum, a monolithic roof with simple cornice is used in place of the classic entablature and pediment. The columns, with modified entablature, are recessed into the portal. The salient qualities of the classic temple form are thus retained with modification of detail and cost. PL21986 for Frank E. Haag, Esq., Kensico Cemetery, New York.

The stepped or pyramidal roof, with monolithic construction, here replaces the classic pediment, albeit the frieze and architrave of the classic entablature are retained. The recessed portal is flanked with pilasters in place of columns,—an admirable adaptation of the classic temple form. PL19633 for the Estate of John H. Flagler in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City. Edward I. Shire, Archt.

MODERN VARIANTS OF THE CLASSIC TEMPLE TYPE

This mausoleum adheres closely to the classic non-columnar temple form save for the monolithic roofstone,—a modern note and one that insures the permanent and water-tight construction so indispensable in mausoleums. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the importance of sound building practice and experience in the design of self-maintaining structures like the mausoleum. PL17110 for Charles L. Denison, Esq., New York City.

Economy is no excuse for commonplace design or inferior construction. Mausoleums of moderate cost are a feature of Presbrey-Leland service. In this building, for example, the decoration is confined to the door; the masonry is jointed to attain pleasing texture and the roof is monolithic. L8299 for Joseph Boyer, Esq., Detroit, Mich.

Graceful tapering walls, rising from a concave base and topped with a monolithic roof, here illustrate the function of resourceful design in mausoleums of moderate cost. Again the decoration is fittingly centered on the portal, with cruciform decorations flanking the name. PL22385, designed for the Estate of Marietta W. Crowley and erected in Mountain Grove Cemetery, Bridgeport, Conn.

MODERN MAUSOLEUMS OF MODERATE COST

A mausoleum may be reduced to the minimum size by omitting the vestibule or naos, placing the crypts or loculi directly behind the door. Not more than six interments above the floor level can be accommodated with this plan, for the door must be the full width and height of the catacomb or loculi group. It is desirable to enrich and panel the door, as in the example above, because of the large door opening. PL24788 for Henry Ruegg, Jersey City, N. J.

The underground portion of the so-called "side-hill vault" may be constructed of concrete,—hence a practical economy. Modern waterproof construction obviates the former limitation of these buildings and the lovely Georgian detail of this example offers a contrast to the dismal appearance of so many side-hill vaults. L9100 for W. O. Rutherford, Esq., Akron, Ohio.

This mausoleum of the side-hill type is similar to the non-vestibule form illustrated at the bottom of Plate XVI, although the crypts are set back from the door to afford a small vestibule. The facade is extended beyond the side walls and above the roof to compensate for the larger doors required for buildings of this type. PL23839 for Mrs. Thomas J. Ryder ,Washington, D. C.

THE SIDE-HILL VAULT AND SMALLER MAUSOLEUMS

This example illustrates the mausoleum of minimum dimensions. There is no vestibule and the door opens directly to the three crypts behind the door. An additional crypt may be placed below floor level without affecting the exterior proportions of the building. For a small family, such a structure is at once economical and architecturally interesting. L4824 for Mrs. James O'Connor Woodlawn Cementery, New York City.

Like the mausoleum illustrated at the left, this building has no vestibule. A bronze grille is substituted for the door, thus attaining a further economy and giving unobstructed view of the inscriptions on the stone catacomb fronts. Such buildings may be made extremely simple in design. PL19470 for the Estate of Josephine Hines, Newark, New Jersey.

Some economy is effected when the walls are rough-hewn or rock-faced, although it requires painstaking and skillful craftsmanship to attain interesting cleavage without tool marks which deface so much work of this type. In this rock-face mausoleum of the Ionic temple form, the facade, entablature and roof are finished stone. L6665 for D. W. Thompson, Esq., Bridgeport, Conn.

The granitic beauty of rough-hewn stone appealed to the great builders of old, notably the Phoenicians. The white Dummerston Granite from the Presbrey-Leland quarries in Vermont is singularly effective for this rustic treatment. All surfaces excepting the roof and columns are thus rough-hewn in this building. PL23099 for the Estate of Lucien B. Price, in Greenwich, Connecticut.

ROCKFACE MAUSOLEUMS
TEMPLE AND GOTHIC TYPE

When done by skillful craftsmen, the rock or rustic surface may give interesting texture to the walls of such simple buildings as this modern variant of the temple form. And the same treatment obviously curtails the cost of the small mausoleums illustrated on the opposite page. PC5618, for the William H. Henriques Estate, in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

The rock-face surface is particularly appropriate for this quaint and simple adaptation of the Gothic chapel. And it is noteworthy that mausoleums of the Gothic type, with steep roof and buttresses, are better adapted to the rough-hewn surface than buildings of the classic temple form. Indeed, there is no historic precedent for the rustic treatment of temple walls. PL24175 for Mrs. Anton Kliegl in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

The sarcophagi of antiquity were used for entombment, but here in America the sarcophagus is reproduced or adapted as a monument and not a tomb. However, the sepulchral sarcophagus may take the place of a mausoleum where only two interments are required. The example here illustrated has a removable cap-stone giving access to the crypts. Egyptian decoration is used. Sometimes the walls are rough-hewn. Additional crypts may be placed in the foundation below. PL20750, for Oscar Ising, Esq., Elizabeth, New Jersey.

THE SEPULCHRAL SARCOPHAGUS—EGYPTIAN AND CLASSIC SOURCE

Where two interments are made in one sarcophagus, it is necessary to so increase the height that the resulting porportions depart radically from ancient prototype. To avoid this result, two sarcophagi may be placed side by side in a single unit. Such a double-sarcophagus expresses a nice sentiment when it provides sepulture for husband and wife. Access to the crypts may be provided at the ends or by a removable cap-stone. PL23746 for R. G. Latham, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Underground vaults or tombs covered with granite ledger-stones are extensively used in some sections of the country, notably in Philadelphia and vicinity. Tombs of this type known as caemetaria were extensively used in ancient Rome. The concrete subterranean structure of these tombs is not unlike the interior of a mausoleum, often lined with marble and accommodating any number of crypts or loculi. The removable ledger-stone rests on a base through which an opening gives access to the loculi below. The ledger-tomb in the fore-ground of the illustration above was designed for Dr. J. P. Nichol and erected in West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia. PL17512.

CAEMETARIA—SUBTERRANEAN VAULTS OR LEDGER-TOMBS

When thel edger i s used to cover a subterranean tomb, it is desirable to avoid excessive size and weight to facilitate removal of the slab when interments are made. Hence, if important scale or some note of individuality is required, it is best attained by adding some feature to the setting,—an exedra, bench, monumental vase or any one of the memorial types shown in Part III of the illustrations. An exedra of modest proportions, for example, is placed at one end of this ledger-tomb. PL24212 for Basil L. Smith, Esq., Wynnewood, Pa.

The Columbarium, or repository for cinerary urns, may take the form of a small mausoleum in which niches line the walls in place of crypts or loculi. Sometimes the structure is large enough to accommodate only one tier of niches protected by a bronze door with plate glass. The example here shown is one of the mausoleum type with a sizable naos or chamber. Gothic decoration is used and the door is beautifully modelled. PL19347 for Mrs. S. Guggenheim in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

THE COLUMBARIUM—THREE PRINCIPAL METHODS FOR INTERRING CINERARY URNS

Cinerary urns may be placed in a concrete repository below ground and covered with a removable flat slab or ledger-stone. When only one or two members of a family are cremationists, the urns may be placed in the concrete foundation of the headstone or marker. In this example, the ledger-stone is used with a monumental urn for the memorial. Other types of memorial may be used with such a ledger in the foreground. L8725 for Mrs. Arthur J. Slade in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

With few exceptions, any of the central or family monuments illustrated on Plates XXIX–XCIX, inclusive, may be used as columbaria by sinking a niche into the surface and covering the repository with a bronze tablet equipped with hinges, lock and key,—similar to the bronze used on the simple monument of polished granite here illustrated. Space for several urns may thus be provided. L8496 for Mrs. H .W. Grantland, Nashville, Tenn.

HEADSTONES, MARKERS, LEDGER-STONES AND OTHER MEMORIALS DESIGNED TO MARK EACH INTERMENT

THE INDIVIDUAL MEMORIAL

HEADSTONES, MARKERS, LEDGER STONES, ETC.

THE memorials illustrated in this group are designed to mark each interment as distinct from the central or family monument. It is highly important that the reader should refer to Part III of the article entitled "How to Select a Memorial" before deciding upon a memorial of this type. Suffice it here to repeat the warning that extreme caution should be exercised to avoid over-crowding the plot with important memorials at each grave. Contemporary practice gives preference to a central monument with very simple markers of uniform design at the individual graves—a plan that effects impressive unity and eventual economy. Important individual memorials are best used when only a few interments are to be made on a plot with no central or family monument.

Celtic headstone Cross at Glendalough, Ireland.

Ancient Celtic grave Cross in Wales.

Colonial headstone of John Grosvenor Roxbury, Massachusetts.

Colonial table-tomb in Center Street Burial Ground Newton, Massachusetts.

An early Christian headstone, A.D., 800 now among the Etruscan antiquities in the Bologna Museum was the prototype of this memorial to a noted clergyman. L6514 for Mrs. Justin Field, erected in Newton Lower Falls, Mass.

REPRODUCTIONS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND COLONIAL HEADSTONES

Ancient Celtic erect Cross-tablets in the British Isles are the source of many significant headstones designed in the Presbrey-Leland studios. This reproduction, L5998, was erected in the Episcopal Churchyard at Newburgh, New York, for Miss Maria H. Hasbrouck.

On this large family plot in the cemetery at Old Lyme, Conn., Presbrey-Leland Studios have retained the appealing charm of the quaint Colonial churchyard. The table-tomb in the foreground and the headstones were adapted from measured drawings of early 18th century examples in the Presbrey-Leland library of memorial art. PL19433 designed for Charles H. Ludington, Esq., Old Lyme, Conn.

When only two or four interments are planned for a cemetery plot, the double headstone may be used in place of a central or family monument. Inscriptions may be carved on front and rear at each grave. Such a double headstone expresses a nice sentiment when husband and wife are interred side by side alone in a plot. PL21929 designed for Lacey R. Blackman, Esq., Bridgeport, Conn.

THE DOUBLE HEADSTONE

Like the double headstone, a long low tablet through the center of a small plot may bear inscriptions at each grave, thus obviating markers or footstones. Memorials of this type, however, are desirable only when few interments are contemplated; for it is obviously desirable that each inscription appear in its proper relation to the interment. PL23195 for A. W. Rossiter, Esq Flushing Cemetery, Long Island, New York.

A modern headstone adapted from the Celtic erect Cross-tablet, introducing a cruciform outline with Passion Flower border. PL20218 designed for J. W. Rixey-Smith and erected at Culpeper, Virginia.

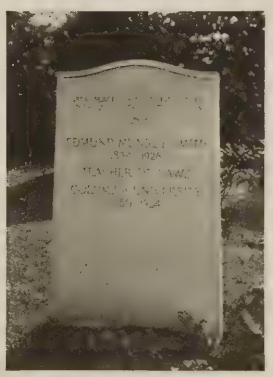
The ree-standing Cross, of modest proportions, may be used as a headstone. The various forms of the Cross are illustrated on Plates XLIII–LIV. L6178 for Mrs. Gordon MacDonald, Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Slate was a favoured medium for the headstone of Colonial times. This reproduction is done in the durable black Monson, Maine, slate. PL20492 designed for Rudolph Weld, Esq., and erected in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE HEADSTONE IN VARIOUS FORMS

Modern headstone introducing a cruciform decoration. The outline is reminiscent of the Colonial examples, the decoration is Celtic. PL18971 designed for Mrs. J. H. Legate, erected in Paterson, New Jersey.

The addition of a base-stone suggests stability to some, albeit modern concrete foundation construction obviates any practical need for the base. L5983 for J. McElwain, Esq., in Kensico Cemetery, New York.



Tapering lines, the cyma curve and excellent proportions lend distinction to this typical modern headstone. PL23252 for Mrs. E. Munroe-Smith, in Greenwood Cemetery Brooklyn New York.

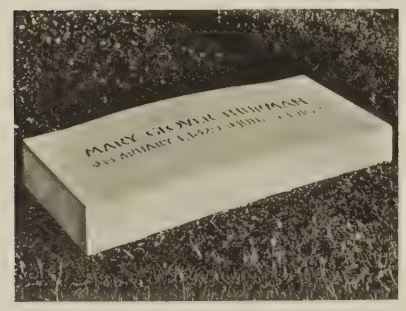
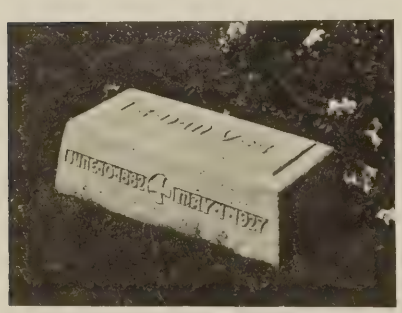
The simple rectangular marker, some four inches above grade and inscribed with the name and date, is the favoured form today PC5803 for Mrs. Frank L. Crocker.

The edges of the rectangular marker may be enriched with a plain or decorated moulding to frame the inscription. PC3017 for Mrs. Emily A. Brinckerhoff, Englewood, New Jersey



Severity of rectangular lines may also be relieved by using a subtle curved surface, ellipitical or undulate as in this example, L8857 for the Estate of Mary Thurman, Richmond, Virginia.

THE MARKER— PREFERRED METHOD OF DESIGNATING INDIVIDUAL INTERMENTS



The sides of this marker have been given a slight entasis to simulate the base or socket-stone of the Celtic Cross, which it is designed to accompany. PL24372 for W. J. K. Vanston in Orange New Jersey.

Here the flower-box has been adapted to serve as a marker, desirable only where perpetual maintenance is available. PC7095 for F. Goodwin Smith in Hartford, Connecticut.

Dignity and a sense of protection for the grave are combined in the ledger-stone. The Celtic Cross with Passion Flower is carved in bas-relief on this example, PL19256, designed for the Estate of Edward C. Mayo, erected in Hollywood, Richmond, Va.

The cruciform outline of this recumbent Cross-slab s a departure from the conventional rectangular ledger-stone. The carved border of Passion Flower frames a Cross in relief. PL18523, designed for Carll Tucker, Esq. and erected in Woodlawn, New York City.

THE LEDGER-STONE AND RECUMBENT CROSS

The recumbent Latin Cross, used as a ledger-stone, is at once significant and impressive. It may be enriched with carving at the Crossing and inscriptions on the shaft. PL20314 for Mrs. A. A. Robbins, erected in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

An early Christian tablet of Etruscan source, adapted as a ledger-stone. Note the antique tooling and symbols. L6430 designed for Mrs. T. Delafield and erected in the Protestant Cemetery, Aurora, New York.

When there is no centra or family monument the ledger-stone may be given more importance by increasing the scale or emphasizing the decoration. The example here illustrated is adapted from a 14th Century Gothic tomb at Kilmichael Glassary, Argyllshire, Scotland. Commemorative art of Medieval, Renaissance and Colonial times is rich in suggestions for the ledger-stone. PC2023 for Mrs. Gustav E. Kissell, Morristown, New Jersey.

LEDGER-STONES—ANCIENT AND MODERN SOURCE

Two companion ledgers, like the double-headstone, express a nice sentiment when they commemorate husband and wife. But in adopting this type of memorial it is important to bear in mind that many ledgers on one lot will result in a floor-like mass of stone. The foundation structure of the ledger may be constructed to form a tomb or vault. (See Plate XX.) PL20374 for Mrs. Stevenson Miller in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown, New York.

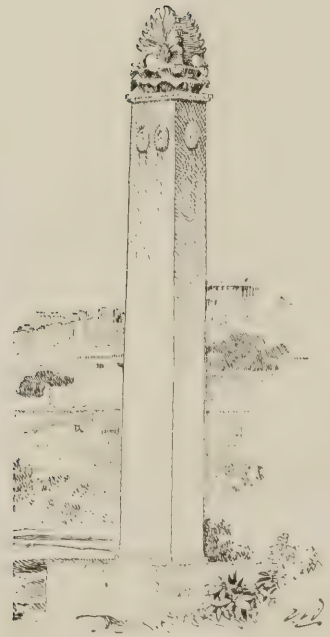
THE TABLET

FOR want of a better term, all monuments of a slender, slab-like form are designated as Tablets, albeit the Greek stele and one or two particular types in this group have more specific names. The Tablet is the most prevalent of all memorials in our cemeteries today. It has replaced the sarcophagus and other more massive compositions—evidence of a desirable tendency to avoid mere bulk of stone.

In design the Tablet may be adapted to the smallest plot and the most conservative appropriation, or it may be given the imposing scale and architectural beauty adapted to a plot of large area. Ancient Greek Stelae, Romano-British headstones and Celtic Cross Tablets influence the design of many memorials of this type today. It will be observed that the Tablets here illustrated are divided in two groups—the vertical and the horizontal.

Grecian grave monument or stele, in the cemetery on the Eridanus, erected in memory of Hegeso, daughter of Proxenus. The modern cemetery tablet had its origin in stelae of this form.



One of the numerous stelae in the Ceramicus, Athens. The stele was the favoured type of memorial in ancient Greece, notably as a cenotaph.

In the literature of art we are often told that the ancient stele or grave monument typifies the superb refinement of Greek design. Hence it is that architects and sculptors so frequently adopt the stele in memorials to notables in art, science and the military. L6385 for Mrs. Gustave Schirmer, erected at Princeton, New Jersey.

REPRODUCTIONS AND ADAPTATIONS OF THE CLASSIC STELE

The stele is scarcely rivalled as a theme for the memorial of moderate cost. In this example, of Greco-Roman source, the simplicity and artistic restraint of the Greek stele is retained. The festoon, a Roman decoration, had its origin in the garlands adorning sacrificial instruments in the temple. TD5928 designed for Mrs. Agnes C. Rice, St. Louis, Mo.

Many of the ancient stelae, notably on the Acropolis and in the cemetery at the Dipylon, were enriched with superb bas-reliefs. And those monuments of antiquity found a wide appeal during the Renaissance, when commemorative art reached its pinnacle. This sculptured stele, designed by McKim, Mead and White, shows Renaissance influence. PL23207, for Joseph A. Skinner, Esq., Holyoke, Mass.

The crest or crowning ornament of the stele is generally considered to be the supreme contribution of the ancient Greek to architectural ornament. The crest here used was copied from casts in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. L8990, for Mrs. Howard A. Foushee, Durham, North Carolina.

This modern variant of the stele departs from prototype in the massive treatment of the shaft or diestone. Of neoclassic influence in design, this memorial suggests the transition from ancient stele to modern erect tablet. PL20452, designed for Henry C. Ballou, Esq., and erected in Utica, New York.

REPRODUCTIONS AND MODERN VARIANTS OF THE STELE

Erect tablets of this type, monumental in scale, are among the most impressive of contemporary memorials. Their source may be traced to the stelae and the shrine-like monuments illustrated on Plate XXIX. The architectural detail in this example is thoroughly studied,—a feature of Presbrey-Leland memorials. This monument, PL20451, and the example above at the right, were designed for Henry C. Ballou, Esq., and erected in Utica New York.

Among other prototypes for modern erect-tablets are the Romano-British headstones. These upright slabs, quaintly inscribed, were reared by Roman soldiers in memory of fallen comrades during the occupation of Great Britain. This modern variant introduces a platform-like base. PL19145 for William A. Chaplin ,Esq., Springfield, Mass.

Vertical lines, in the abstract significance of form, express aspiration,—horizontal lines, repose. The verticality of this contemporary tablet is emphasized by the tapering contour. Significant poppies are massed in the receding panel and the family name is incised on a band overlaying the decoration. L9058 for Mrs. F. L. Stutson, Washington Court House, Ohio.

Another example of the monumental erect-tablet similar to the subject shown on Plate XXXI. Classic detail and important scale here attain architectural dignity, withal an impressive simplicity. Memorials of this type are sometimes flanked by columns in place of the pilasters here used. See Plate LXXXVI. Like all other large monuments, they are best adapted to plots of considerable size. L7283, for Mrs. Wm. G. Schermerhorn, Schenectady, New York.

VERTICAL TABLETS—ROMANO-BRITISH SOURCE AND CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

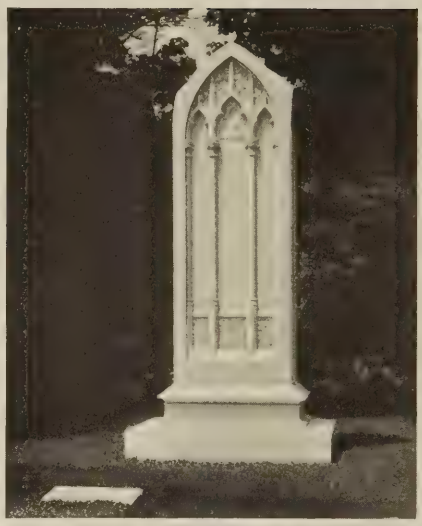
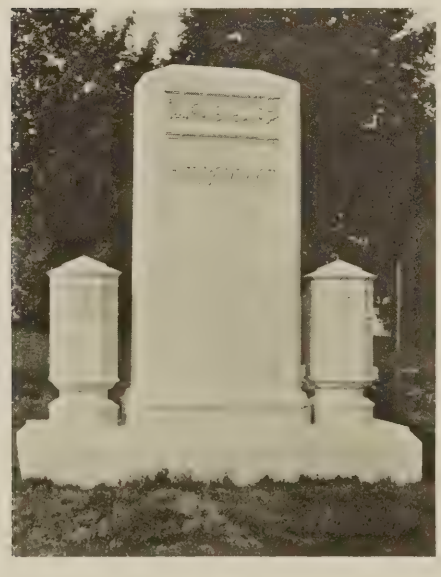
The revival of Gothic architecture in America was mentioned on Plate XIII, and monuments no less than mausoleums are reflecting this trend toward the spiritual style. This memorial illustrates how the tablet may be Gothicised by means of simple and relatively inexpensive cusped panels,—a traditional detail of Gothic architecture. The form is not unlike a reredos. PL17623 for Mrs. T. M. Doody, Orange, New Jersey.



In outline, this tablet recalls the Gothic lancet window. Tracery, adapted from the Perpendicular Gothic with its floral sculpture, is used to enrich the tablet,—the mullions dividing the surface into three parts representing the Trinity. This memorial indicates the trend toward significance in the art of the monument today. PL23422 for Mrs. H. Martin Brown, Providence, Rhode Island.



VERTICAL TABLETS—GOTHIC AND GOTHICISED

The tablet, flanked by urns, has found a wide appeal in contemporary art and in this example the tablet is Gothicised by splaying the corners and introducing cusped panels. The octagonal urns and the tablet-base are enriched with Gothic moulds. The symbolical True Vine is carved in a panel above the family name which is done in legible text letters. PL20235, for Mrs. H. C. Hallenbeck, Orange, N. J

Good proportions and correct detail are not expensive and the well designed memorial of moderate cost involves no greater outlay then commonplace productions. For example, the contour of this modest erect-tablet is enriched with simple bands and fillets,—inexpensive but authentic mouldings. Three classic rosettes accent the family name. PL20394, for the Estate of Ernest C. Klipstein in Orange, New Jersey.

Historic styles and types may be reproduced or adapted in memorials of moderate cost. This reproduction of a contemporary English Cross tablet is clearly a variant of the later Celtic headstones, introducing a pierced Cross. The surfaces are given texture with quaint tooling. For other examples of the erect Cross tablet see Plates XLIII, XLIV and LII. PL22443, for Mrs. Marian Castan in New York City.

VERTICAL TABLETS—REPRODUCTIONS AND ADAPTATIONS

In this tablet of the vertical type, Presbrey-Leland designers have recalled early Christian monoliths of the British Isles,—weather-worn slabs with softened edges and a subtle entasis, perhaps the effect of time. Here again texture and interest are given the surfaces by the antique finish. The bronze inscription tablet, with a border of carved laurel, together with the rounded base-stone are modern notes. PL24593 for Mrs. Ida C. Fisk in Orange, New Jersey.

The elongated tablet of horizontal form has no direct historic prototype. It was developed here in America by combining the slenderness of the erect tablet with the horizontal lines of the sarcophagus form, see Plates XL–LXIV. In this example, however, the quaint Colonial table-tomb has been suggested by introducing balusters flanking the tablet—an appropriate motive for this memorial in its New England setting. PL21675 for Edwin S. Gardner, Esq., Springfield, Mass.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET— CLASSIC AND COLONIAL DETAIL

Memorials of the horizontal tablet form are the most prevalent of all types in our cemeteries. Indeed, the repetition of plain oblong slabs often attains monotonous uniformity. Hence the effort to lend some degree of architectural interest to memorials of this type. Urns flanking the tablet successfully enrich the composition and this motive has attained wide appeal. Note how the urns in this example sustain the horizontal lines of the tablet, composing beautifully with the base-stone—also the alignment between the carved bands and the volutes. An admirable example of studied design. PL18950 for Mrs. John W. Dwight in Washington, D. C.

It has been elsewhere observed that horizontal lines, in the abstract significance of form, express repose. To this significance of form may be added the spiritual associations of the Gothic style—a fusion of significant line and detail which offers an appealing departure from so much that is meaningless in memorial design. This horizontal tablet, and the example below, are Gothicised with simple panels. PC7121 for J. H. McClement, Esq., in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET—GOTHIC DETAIL

There are certain well defined laws of architectural composition, among them the principle of definite form. A design should be definitely vertical or definitely horizontal in movement. The subject here illustrated bespeaks the efficacy of this principle. Obviously, accentuated horizontal lines result in an expanse of stone; but this surface, to avoid an effect of mere wall, has here been enriched with panelling. Note how the divisions of these Gothic panels relieve the surface without impairing the horizontal form. PL23274 for Theodore F. Merseles in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Conservative in outline and detail, this modern tablet illustrates the all-important function of studied proportions in compositions of simple design. Like the two subjects on Plate XXXIV, this memorial is given a note of individuality by using the antique tooled finish for all surfaces save the name panel, which is given a finer finish and enriched with two incised cruciform ornaments. PL20851 for Dr. Robert C. Howard in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET—CONTEMPORARY DESIGN

The Annunciation Lily, which frames the Cross and inscription on this memorial, is among the most significant and graceful of all floral motives in art. With exquisite refinement of line, the designer has here recalled the graceful curve of the lily stem in detailing the curving contour of this tablet—an excellent example of resourcefulness in design. Models in clay for the sculptured and architectural decoration of Presbrey-Leland memorials are made in the Studios by sculptors collaborating with the designers. PL20369 for Livingston Middleditch, Jr., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

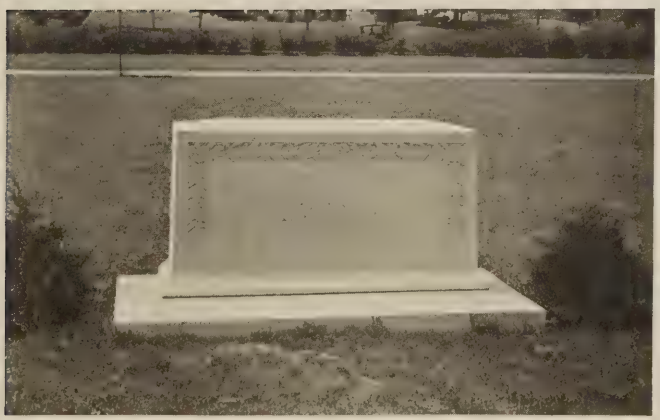
Iti s important to remember that the inexpensive memorial of modest scale and detail deserves and involves no less study and experiment than the more imposing productions—for the designer must rely largely upon good lines and proportions for his effect. This tablet, so beautifully adapted to the site, bespeaks the study given to the design of such memorials by Presbrey-Leland. PL24217 for Mrs. Amos J. Thornton ,in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET —CONTEMPORARY DESIGN



Decoration should not be confused with elaboration, nor should ornament deny the cemetery memorial that restful simplicity which is so important and appropriate. To this end, another law of good composition in design must be observed—ornament should properly emphasize the structural lines of the object it decorates. Here again the truth of a principle is demonstrated by the harmony between outline and decoration on this modern tablet. PL22798 for the Estate of James C. Ewing in Mount Hebron Cemetery, Montclair, New Jersey.

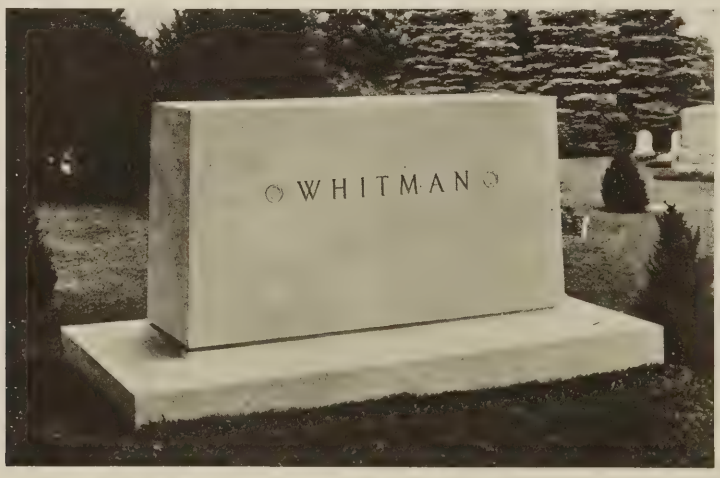
Sheer simplicity, relieved only by a carefully studied contour and good composition in the lettering, is the dominant note in this memorial designed for Mrs. Calvin Coolidge in memory of her father. The importance of lettering, as an element of effect and decoration, is too often ignored. Note the exquisite detail of the classic alphabet here used and how the letterist has attained pleasing composition through alignment. PL20760 for Mrs. Calvin Coolidge in Burlington, Vermont.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET OF MODERATE COST



The art world has been much interested, of late, in a principle or theory of design known as dynamic symmetry. Whether or no the ancient Greeks observed such a principle is purely a matter of conjecture, but there is much to be said for the theory and this memorial illustrates an experiment in dynamic symmetry conducted in the Presbrey-Leland Studios. The proportions of this tablet, on plan, are those of the Parthenon and the excellent result attracted some discussion in periodicals when the memorial was erected. PL19411 for Barry F. Whitman, Esq., in Reading, Pennsylvania.

Continuity of line is another quality of good design which is particularly important in memorials of moderate cost. Note how the concave surface of the base-stone sweeps into the tapering line of the tablet in effecting continuity of line for the contour of this memorial. The band of carving interrupted by the family name is yet another detail featuring this quality. PL20858 for Mrs. George W. Kearney in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET OF MODERATE COST

The cyma curve, for the upper contour of this tablet, is widely used and too often with unhappy results. The charm of this so-called serpentine line lies in a subtle transition from concave to convex form—a quality which is often defeated by using a bold curve in the center. Meticulous attention to such details is largely responsible for the architectural merit of Presbrey-Leland memorials. PC6802 for Ernest H. Ripley in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

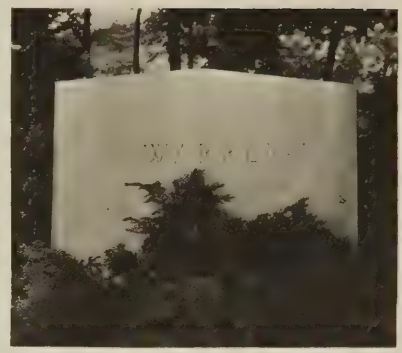
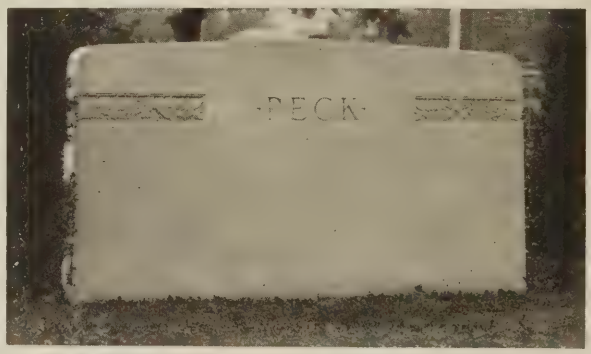
The monolithic tablet, a single slab of stone, is among the most ancient of all memorials and it has properly taken its place among the favoured forms for the memorial of moderate cost. A typical modern monolith introducing a subtle curvilinear outline. PL19129 for Mrs. Willard L. Candee in Brooklyn, New York.



Monolithic tablets are imbedded in cement or doweled to the foundation, insuring all the stability of a tablet with stone base. This example, picturesquely framed in evergreens, is little more than a simple slab—and yet how impressive the result. PL22396 for the Estate of Frank Dale Warren Plainfield, New Jersey.

THE HORIZONTAL TABLET—MONOLITHIC

The material ordinarily used for the base-stone of a tablet may be applied to the tablet-proper, thus attaining far more impressive scale and at less cost. And such a monolith offers a welcome change from the monotonous repetition of die-stone and base. Then, too, there is an element of unity and permanence in the single or monolithic block of stone. PL18967 for Dr. M. R. Peck Hartford Connecticut.



Such is the appeal of the monolithic form that it has extended to memorials of the more expensive class. This monolith, richly decorated with the significant Passion Flower, is properly of the Screen type, see Plates LXXIX–LXXX. The Passion Flower has become one of the most favoured of floral motives in contemporary memorial art. Each part of the flower and leaf represents some attribute of the Crucifixion. PL18085 for O. H. Funsten, Esq., Richmond, Va.

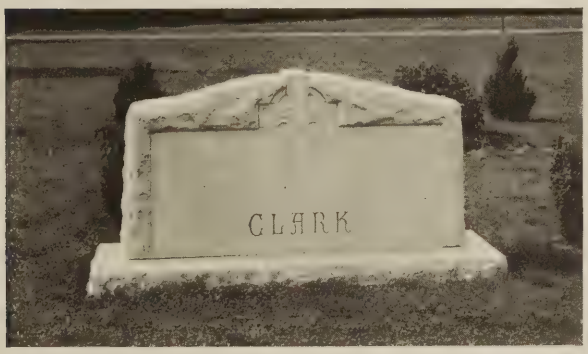
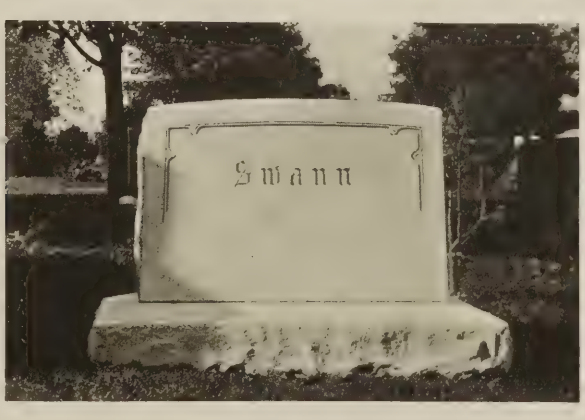
The rough-hewn or so-called rock-face surface is occasionally effective, but when the natural beauty of rough stone has an appeal, it is often more desirable to use the picturesque field boulder, untouched by mallet and chisel. A bronze tablet is used for the family name. PL17436 for Mrs. Louis Levi, Salem Fields Cemetery, New York.

Contrary to popular notion, the rock-face surface involves skilled craftsmanship to attain a pleasing result; for the natural cleavage of granite is neither interesting nor beautiful. The rugged quality is effected by carefully pitching the surface and by leaving no defacing tool marks. PL20564 for Ellsworth E. Allen, in Kensico Cemetery, New York.



THE HORIZONTAL TABLET—ROCK-FACE SURFACE

What Ruskin refers to as the granitic beauty of rough-hewn stone is here attained by skillful technique. The rugged surface has been shaped to the designer's line without sacrificing the rustic quality. Legible Gothic text letters are particularly desirable for memorials of this type, for they lend a note of refined design to the otherwise rough-hewn block of stone. PL24518 for J. A. Clark, Esq. in Montclair N. J.



This memorial is typical, in outline, of the conventional rock-face tablet. It differs from commercial productions, however, in the use of simple but authentic detail in contrast to the novel and mechanical ornament of standardized work. The incised Gothic panel and text letters involve less cost than fancy decorations—and how much more impressive they are! PC8029 for Arthur Swann, Esq., in Kensico Cemetery, New York City.

THE CROSS

REGARDLESS of sect or creed, the Cross is the chosen symbol of Christianity and as such it is traditionally one of the most significant and appropriate of all memorials. Every style or period of art since the dawn of the Christian era offers typical Crosses which are today reproduced or adapted for the cemetery memorial. Notable among these are the Celtic Crosses, rich in symbolical carvings; the Gothic Wayside and Churchyard Crosses, so beautiful in architectural detail; and the Calvary, Latin or Passion Crosses, the most simple and often the most appealing of all. The fact that Crosses are usually supported by a relatively small base and that they range in design from the simple to the ornate, makes it possible to adapt the memorial Cross to almost any appropriation or plot. The various major types of the memorial Cross are here shown together with a few Erect Cross Tablets on which the Chosen Symbol is carved in relief.

South Cross at Ahenny, Tipperary in Ireland, Celtic Crosses are variously referred to as Runic, Ionian, Romanesque and High Crosses—incorrectly as "Maltese."

14th Century Cross in Derbyshire. These lovely Gothic Churchyard and Wayside Crosses of ancient England are commanding a belated appeal here in America.

The Latin or Cross of Passion is a familiar landmark throughout the Old World. The steps represent the Trinity or the three Christian virtues, Faith, Hope and Charity.

An ancient erect Cross Tablet in Perthshire. These tablets, sometimes called Danish stones, feature the Cross in relief with elaborate Celtic carvings.

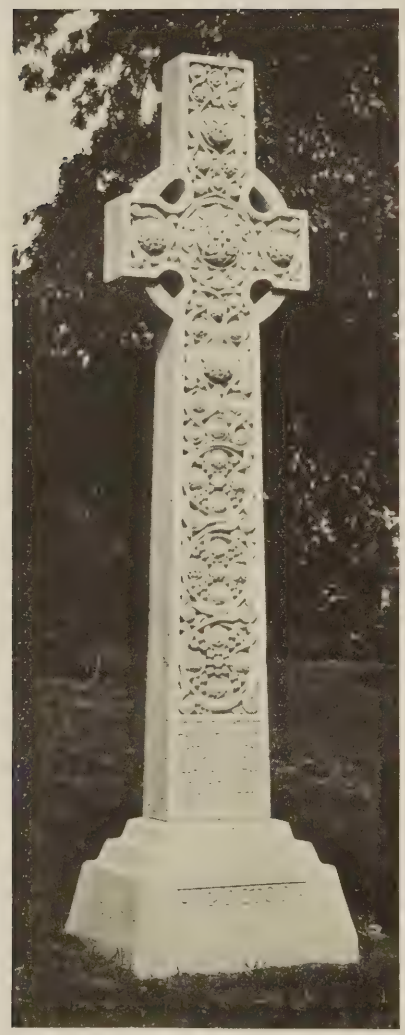
Original photograph of the famed St. Martin's Cross, supreme achievement of Christian Celtic art in stone, on the "Holy Isle" of Iona. Nearby are the graves of forty kings, among them Duncan and Macbeth, immortalized by Shakespeare.

THE FOUR MAJOR TYPES OF THE MEMORIAL CROSS

In this Latin Cross the transverse bar is contracted and the shaft tapered, thus accentuating the scale. The careful proportioning of the Steps or Calvary cannot be overemphasized. PL19606 for James S. Dunn, Esq., Winston-Salem North Carolina.

A reproduction, with minor variations, of an ancient Celtic erect Cross Tablet in Aberlemno Churchyard, Forfarshire—one of the most decorative examples of Celtic art, featuring both zoömorphs and interlacing. Symbols of the Four Evangels are added. Note the antique tooling. L5502 for Mrs. Grace A. Still, Holyoke, Mass.

Gothic Wayside and Churchyard Crosses offer a departure from prevailing Celtic and Latin forms in our cemeteries. This variant of a Cross in Somersby, Lincolnshire, has the typical socket-stone, octagonal shaft, carved knop and Cross-head protected by the gabled roof or hood. PL17281 for the Estate of George E. Dimock, Elizabeth, New Jersey.



This reproduction of the St. Martin's Cross adheres meticulously to prototype save for a few modifications, notably in conventionalizing the serpents and other zoömorphs on the original. Similar adaptations were carved for Dr. Henry Van Dyke and the late Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot. PL24372 for W. J. K. Vanston, Esq., Orange, New Jersey.

REPRODUCTIONS AND VARIANTS OF ANCIENT CELTIC HIGH CROSSES

Such is the beauty of St. Martin's Cross in outline, that it may be effectively reproduced with only a portion of the carving, or plain. In this example, the bosses representing the five wounds of our Lord are retained with simple interlacing at the Crossing. TD5649 for Mrs. Lillian R. Mearns in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Modern variants of the Celtic Cross may be supported by the spreading Calvary or Trinity base in place of the compact socket-stone of ancient examples. The decoration of this memorial was adapted from the interlacing of a 12th Century Cross near the site of ancient Tuam Cathedral County Galway, Ireland. L5669, for C. A. Bovey, Esq., Minneapolis, Minn.

Impressive monumental scale may be given the Celtic Cross for large plots by using both the socket-stone and the Calvary base. The plexiform decoration of this example, an intricate system of plaits, belongs to the later Celtic period. L6158 for A. N. Drown, Esq., San Francisco, California.

The Celtic" High Crosses" of Ireland are generally massive and the nimbus is large in diameter. This example in outline adheres closely to the so-called "Cross of the Scriptures" at Clonmacnoise. The heavy shaft and large socket-stone afford a sense of permanence and stability. L8380 for Mrs. B. W. Porter, Greenfield, Massachusetts.

Appealing grace and simplicity distinguish this adaptation of an ancient Celtic Cross at Knapdale in Argyllshire. The proportions, silhoutte and rockery base adhere to prototype but the carving has been confined to a boss at the Crossing and a panel of interlacing below the name, thus attaining a distinctive note of individuality. PL23479 for Mrs. Hedwig Wilckes at Tarrytown, New York.

REPRODUCTIONS AND VARIANTS OF ANCIENT CELTIC HIGH CROSSES

This imposing memorial Cross is a reproduction, with minor changes in the decoration, of a 15th Century Cross situated southwest of Priory Church in Oransey, Argyllshire. Of the late Celtic period, it singularly recalls the earlier "wheel-crosses" of Wales, Cornwall and the Isle of Man (see page opposite). Crosses of this period, like the example at the bottom of Plate XLVIII, are enriched with a combination of Celtic motives and Anglo-Norman foliage. TD5704 for Mrs. Henry Duncan Wood in Bayshore, Long Island.

REPRODUCTIONS AND MODERN ADAPTATIONS OF CELTIC HIGH CROSSES

The storied panels of the ancient high Crosses, with their effigies of Biblical characters and saints, are here replaced by allegorical sculptures depicting events in the life of Gen. William Joyce Sewell. The Cross ranks among the most important works of A. Stirling Calder, the eminent sculptor. Carved and erected for Mr. Calder at Camden, New Jersey. L5707.

Another adaptation of the storied Celtic Cross, introducing the Twelve Apostles, the Blessed Virgin and symbols of the Four Evangels. The original model of this Presbrey-Leland Memorial, Kristina Gustafson Lascari, sculptor, was exhibited at the Architectural League. PL17395 for Richard H. Smith, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

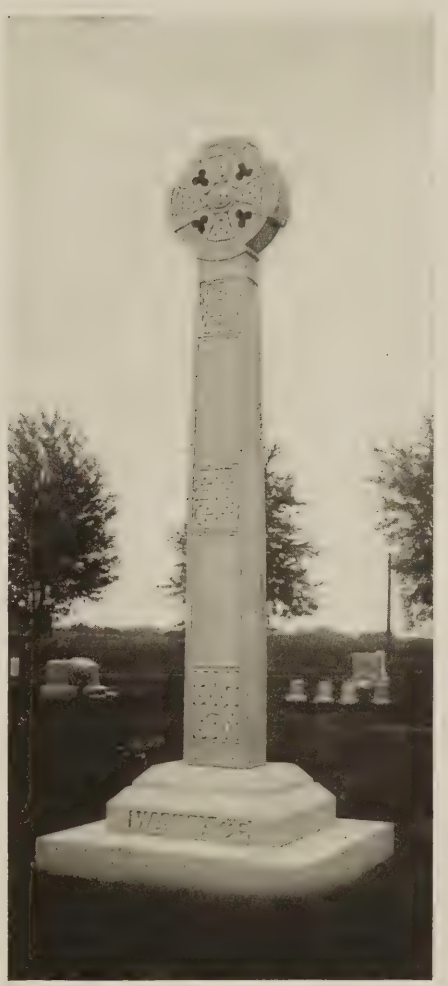
Crosses of this type marked the transition from Celtic erect Cross-slabs to the free-standing high Cross. Examples are found in Wales, Cornwall and The Isle of Man. This memorial, adapted from a Cross at Carew in Pembrokeshire, for Mrs. W. S. Rose, Meadville, Pennsylvania. L8978.

This reproduction of a 15th Century Wayside or "Weeping Cross" at Inverary in Argyllshire clearly shows the kinship between the late Romanesque and early Gothic styles. The Cross-head has the form of the heraldic Cross fleury and here again the Vine of Life is used. TD5264 for Mrs. Frank J. Hearne, Kansas City, Missouri.



The Cornwall type of Celtic Cross is here adapted in a memorial of imposing scale. The Crosshead or wheel is reproduced from an example at S. Columb Major in Cornwall. The tall shaft with a slight entasis has been enriched with three panels of interlacing. The interesting base is borrowed from similar examples in Wales. Such a memorial offers a welcome variation from the prevalence of "High Crosses" in our cemeteries. L8308 for Mrs. Lew Wallace, Ogdensburg, New York.

ADAPTATIONS OF THE CELTIC "WHEEL CROSS" AND LATER WAYSIDE CROSS

A modern interpretation of the Celtic Cross in which the interlaced carving is a simple plait with cruciform breaks fashioned in endless pattern. The base or socket-stone is subordinated,—in some examples it may be effectively omitted. L8282 for John D. Langhorne, Esq., Washington, D. C.

MODERN VARIANTS OF THE CELTIC CROSS

The interlaced carving of ancient Celtic Crosses is admittedly beautiful but few antiquarians assign any definite symbolism to the interlacing or plait-work. Hence the beautiful and symbolical Passion Flower on many modern variants. L9881 for Alfred T. Harris, Jr., Richmond, Va.

In outline and detail, this memorial is purely a modern variant of the Celtic Cross. The compact arm or transverse bar, the modified nimbus, the deeply panelled shaft, the socket-stone with three definite breaks representing the Trinity and the beautifully modelled Passion Flower,—these are modern variations. PL19304 for Miss Cornelia Ross in Auburn, N. Y.

Another modern interpretation of the Celtic Cross, introducing the Trinity base and an admirably proportioned shaft on which the decoration is confined to the Crossing, where four bas-reliefs are used symbolizing Faith, Love, Truth and Hope with a Crusader's shield in the center. Vine is used on the nimbus. PL22837 for Mrs. G. C. St. John in Greenwich, Conn.

GOTHIC WAYSIDE AND CHURCH-YARD CROSSES REPRO-DUC-TIONS—ADAPTA-TIONS

Elsewhere it has been observed that the Wayside and Churchyard Crosses of England offer a desirable variation from prevailing Latin and Celtic types. Note the octagonal socket-stone and elongated shaft. L9031 for Rev. Wm. H. DuBose, D.D., Sewanee, Tenn.

In design, this Cross with the Corpus and the quaint gabled hood reflects the spirit of wayside shrines erected during the Crusades. This Cross has also been reproduced without the Corpus. PL17907 for Mrs. Basil Harris in Rye, New York.

Gothic Churchyard Crosses of this type, with two or more steps supporting a socket-stone, octagonal shaft and tabernacled Cross-head, belong to the 13th–15th Centuries. This example was adapted from the "Ampney Crucis", Fairfield Road near Cirencester. L8971 for Mrs. Vernon S. Mann in Great Neck, Long Island.

The Gothic Cross lends itself admirably to adaptation by designers versed in authentic detail. This example illustrates the resourcefulness, expression and appealing beauty attained by Presbrey-Leland designers in adapting the Churchyard Cross. PL17772 for Mrs. W. C. Ruffin in Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Latin or Cross of Passion, see Plates XLIII-IV, may be significantly enriched in various ways. Here the Sacred Monogram is used at the Crossing while the foot of the shaft is adorned with Annunciation Lilies—known also as the Easter Lily. PC5401 for Otto H. Hinck, Esq., Orange, New Jersey.

LATIN CROSS ADORNED —RUSTIC CROSSES

Another method of decorating the Cross of Calvary—the shaft is paneled and enriched with one of the many symbolical flowers or vines. The lily is here used and the arms are silhouetted to recall the panel border. PL24882 for Mrs. Florence Maude Falk in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

To some, the rugged rock-face treatment of the Cross suggests the strength and simplicity of the Christian Faith and as such the Cross has been frequently depicted in art. Studied proportions and a skillful treatment of the rock or quarry face surface are qualities of this memorial Cross. PL23431, for W. F. Grimm, Esq., Utica, New York.

The Celtic Cross, too, is appropriately rough hewn from the rugged granite and as such it somehow recalls the primitive beauty of early Christian Crosses in the British Isles. The contour here suggests the Murdoch Cross at Monasterboice, elsewhere referred to in this book. PC187 for Mrs. David Carlisle in Passaic, New Jersey.

ERECT CROSS TABLETS OR "DANISH STONES," REPRODUCTIONS AND ADAPTATIONS

The earliest monuments of the Christian Celtic era were crude slabs on which the Cross was incised. Later, the Cross appeared in relief on these monoliths, elaborately carved as shown on Plate XLIV. Some antiquarians believe that the high or freestanding Cross thus evolved from the erect tablet. L5629 for Mrs. A. R. Yorke, Millburn, New Jersey.

Like the standard or high Cross, the Celtic tablet has been modified by substituting foliaceous ornament for the ancient interlacing. The Scotch origin of the Walker family, for example, is here indicated by the Scotch Thistle. Singularly, the best examples of the Celtic erect Cross tablet are found in Scotland. L9131 for Mrs. R. M. Walker, Atlanta, Ga.

The weather-worn contour of an early Celtic Cross tablet at South Calnag, Buteshire, has been simulated in shaping the outline and tooling the surfaces of this memorial. The Cross in low relief follows the original in form save for the treatment above the base and the incised pattern in the quadrants of the nimbus. PL24613 for Mrs. Charles Owen, Lynchburg, Virginia.

A modern variant of the ancient erect Cross tablet, introducing Three Steps, or the Calvary base, and a plain Celtic Cross in relief. The vertical lines of the tablet are accentuated, recalling adaptations of the Romano-British slabs illustrated on Plate XXXII. Note the slightly rounded or convex surface of the Cross shaft. PL23150 for Mrs. Alice Sykes, Englewood, N. J.

THE CROSS AS A CENTRAL MOTIVE FOR THE HORIZONTAL TABLET AND EXEDRA

There is no historic prototype for the Cross Tablet of horizontal form. Like other horizontal tablets, shown on Plates XXXV–XLII, it is a contemporary type, albeit the better examples retain qualities of line and detail borrowed from the historic erect Cross Tablet. For instance, the so-called Celtic Wheel Cross is the central feature of this wide tablet, the ends of which are given the entasis often used on ancient headstone Crosses. L9028, in memory of the late Justice Harlan of the United States Supreme Court, erected in Rock Creek Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Either the Cross Tablet or the freestanding Cross may be used as the central feature of the exedra or the screen. In this monumental exedra the Latin Cross Adorned is flanked by high walls or dossers against which are placed low benches. Yet another favoured form features the freestanding Cross, Latin or Celtic, on a pedestal placed in the center of a curving exedra or screen of the type shown on Plates LXVII–LXXX. PC7387A for Alonzo B. Pouch, Esq., in Moravian Cemetery, New York City.

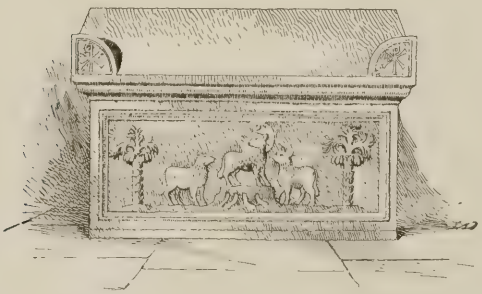
Sentiment, tradition and spiritual significance are admirably expressed in this beautiful Gothic shrine—a notable contribution to the art of the monument in America. Taking for their theme the wayside shrines of the Old World, Presbrey-Leland architects have combined this motive with the Gothic detail of the Landmark, Sanctuary, Preaching, and the spire-shaped so-called Eleanor Crosses of England. The result is a distinctive memorial in which a freestanding bronze Cross is enshrined in a lovely and significant setting. PL22331 for Henry D. Vining, Esq., Springfield, Mass.

THE CROSS ENSHRINED

This imposing shrine was erected in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Cemetery at Troy, New York, by the late Reverend James A. Curtin. The vaulted canopy, with its semi-dome, enshrines an Altar with the Crucifixion group—a sanctuary for reading Mass at the cemetery; indeed, the shrine recalls the sanctuary of Basilican churches and the baldachino or ciborium of Renaissance churches. Such a theme may well be adapted for the memorial on a family plot. L8617 for Reverend James A. Curtin, Troy, New York.

THE SARCOPHAGUS

SARCOPHAGI were undoubtedly used by the Egyptians prior to the building of the Great Pyramid, but it was not until after the days of Trajan that the Greeks and Romans produced the monumental and richly sculptured examples which are found in the museums of Europe today. While the Middle Ages afford many magnificent Gothic sarcophagi, it remained for the Renaissance to bring the design of these sepulchral monuments to its highest development with the work of masters like Michelangelo. In America the sarcophagus rarely is used for actual entombment—serving merely as a monument for the plot. During the last quarter of the 19th century it was decidedly the most prevalent of all memorials in our cemeteries—too often ponderous and over-elaborated. Consonant with the trend away from bulk of stone and extravagant ornament, the better sarcophagi today are less cumbersome, supported by low bases, somewhat elongated in proportions and treated with historic ornament of Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Gothic or Renaissance source.



Sarcophagus at Ravenna from the tomb of Galla Placidia daughter of Theodosius the Great and wife of Constantinus—a work of the 5th Century, A.D. The more elaborate sarcophagi of later date were placed in the Vaults, called Catacombs after a district of that name in Rome.

At Sidon, in ancient Phoenicia, was found this magnificent so-called sarcophagus of Alexander, superbly enriched with ornament and sculpture—the work of Greek artists of the 4th Century B.C.—now in the Imperial Ottoman Museum at Constantinople. Nearby in the Museum is the "Tomb of the Weepers," a sarcophagus of the same period in the form of a miniature Ionic Temple with engaged columns. Hence the inference that these sarcophagi simulated the temple in design.

A reproduction of the sarcophagus of the Roman General Cornelius L. Scipio Barbatus, B.C. 298, now among the treasured relics of antiquity in the Vatican Museum at Rome, formerly in the Catacomb of S. Hermes. The Greek Doric entablature supports heavy volutes or scrolls. Reproductions of this massive tomb were made in great numbers here in America during the late 18th Century. Measured drawings of the famous sarcophagi of antiquity are available in the Presbrey-Leland library of memorial art. This reproduction of the so-called Scipio Sarcophagus, TD5271, for Hon. Addison Brown in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

REPRODUCTIONS AND ADAPTATIONS OF CLASSIC SARCOPHAGI

The chaste beauty and exquisite refinement of classic architecture at its best is expressed in this memorial group situated on a private cemetery plot one acre in area. The central feature is a monument of the sarcophagus type which in form recalls the temple-like examples at Sidon (see plate opposite), and in detail the altar from the Temple of Æscalapius at Pompeii. Sculptured amphoras or state vessels, together with benches are used as accessories. Hughes and Hall, Architects. PL17270 for George S. Dearborn, Esq., at Rye, New York.

SARCOPHAGI—GOTHIC ALTAR TOMB TYPE—BYZANTINE

Altar-tombs, as the termi mplies, had their origin in the table or mensa upon which the early Christians offered the eucharistic sacrifice—a ceremony often of necessity performed on Catacomb tombs. Came then the custom of interring martyrs' remains beneath Church altars—hence the altar tomb. Protestantism abandoned the altar, substituting the communion table. Whether the table-tomb, which resembles the altar-tomb (see Plate XXII), had its origin in the communion table cannot be stated for fact. This reproduction of a 13th Century Altar Tomb in York Cathedral is grouped among sarcophagi in this booklet for convenience as a kindred type. PC6929 for the Estate of James Brown in Old Lyme, Connecticut.

In designing this monumental sarcophagus in the Byzantine style, Presbrey-Leland designers practiced some of the eclecticism or blending of styles which lends so much interest to the work of the Basilican, Byzantine and Romanesque periods. The essential form of this monument recalls an Early Christian sarcophagus now in the Museum at Toulouse while the twisted coupled columns, the cubiform capitals on the corner pillars, the arches with decorated spandrels and the ornament featuring the Vine and Acanthus are of Byzantine source, largely adapted from examples at Toulouse and Ravenna. L5550 for the Estate of Elizabeth Hays, Pittsburgh, Pa.

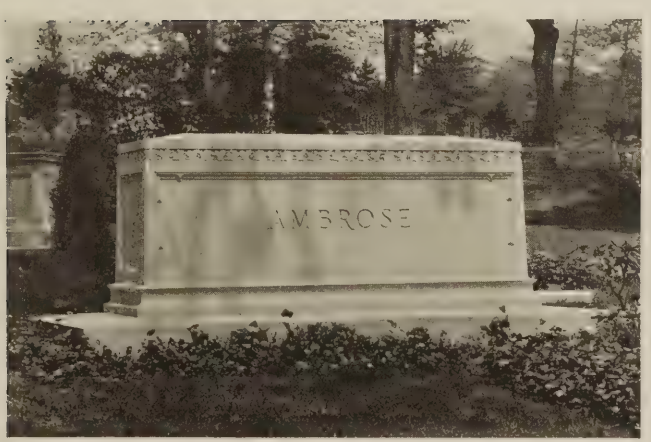
SARCOPHAGI—GOTHIC DETAIL

Like the mausoleum and the tablet, Plates XIII and XXXVI, recent sarcophagi reflect the welcome return to Gothic detail—a revival seriously encouraged by Presbrey-Leland Studios. The relative massiveness of the sarcophagus lends especial importance to panelling as a means of relieving the expanse of surface. Here again tracery borrowed from screens, rood lofts, parapets, stalls and windows of Gothic churches and cathedrals is effectively used for panel motives. Ivy, symbol of faithfulness and memory, is used for the carved band. PL20233 for Mrs. Otis Smith in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.



It is the function of mouldings and panels, in Gothic architecture, to multiply parallel lines of light and shade thus accentuating that vertical elongation which distinguishes the style. The same principle may be applied with telling effect by using these panels and mouldings to emphasize the horizontal form of the sarcophagus. In this example, for instance, the Gothic mouldings of the base, the panelling and the band of carving all give an interesting play of light and shade which accentuates the impressive horizontal mass of the monument. PL18550 for H. T. Ambrose, Esq., Orange, New Jersey.

SARCOPHAGI—BYZANTINE AND RENAISSANCE DETAIL

The early Christian or Basilican style together with the Byzantine in Italy are rich in Christian symbolism featuring the Cross, the sacred Chi Rho monogram, emblems of the Saints, and other symbols all woven into quaintly beautiful decoration. Notable among the relics of that period are several sarcophagi at Ravenna and an altar in the Museum, the decoration of which has been adapted in designing the memorial here illustrated. The two cruciform panels are enriched with an anthemion motive which recalls the rayed Cross—or Cross of glory. L4632 for Mrs. Breese Stevens, Madison, Wis.

Luca della Robbia, Lorenzo Ghiberti, Donatello, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo and the gentle Raphael! What wonder that the tombs and altars of the Renaissance attained an unrivalled splendor! Intra-mural or wall entombment prevailed, hence the outstanding examples in memorial art are of the wall or altar-tomb type. Effigies resting upon sarcophagi were in turn supported by a dado or sub-structure, often an altar, which was enriched with balusters, columns or elaborate panelling. The example here illustrated, Florentine in detail, is reminiscent of the Renaissance intra-mural and altar tombs. L5316 for the Estate of Lawrence Meyers Forty Fort, Pa.

RENAISSANCE SARCOPHAGI—GEORGIAN AND ITALIAN DETAIL

The Colonial style in America was directly influenced by the contemporary Anglo-Classic and Georgian periods of the late Renaissance in England. The kinship of these styles is apparent in our Colonial churchyards no less than it is in the domestic architecture of the time. Indeed, the tombs and headstones of the 18th and early 19th Centuries in America were largely reproductions, and often importations, of English work. Tombs or sarcophagi similar to this illustration are found in the churchyards and burying grounds of New England and Southern states together with the table-tombs and headstones of the Georgian period in England. This example is a reproduction of an English churchyard tomb in Hampstead Parish Church, Middlesex, dated 1777. For Horace Trumbauer, Architect, Philadelphia, Pa. PL24237.

Renaissance architecture has its origin in Italy when Florence under the Medici family early in the 15th Century abandoned the imported or foreign Gothic and returned to the ruins of native Rome for inspiration in reviving classic architecture. Through masters like Brunelleschi and Donatello, Classic tradition and the Orders of Architecture were revived. With the Orders came naturally the return of acanthus in decoration, richly carved in evolute-spiral or rinceau form—notably in superb arabesques. The acanthus rinceau intermingled with the Vine, is used for the decoration of this sarcophagus. The beautifully moulded panels are also typical of Renaissance enrichment. L5885 for E. Mariner, Esq., Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Massive sarcophagi of this type adhere closely to Classic examples in form while the decoration is often of Renaissance source. In this memorial, for instance, the general proportions and base treatment are not unlike the Scipio tomb, Plate LVI; but the denticulated entablature, with its frieze of naturalistic foliage, suggests the Renaissance. The oak leaf is particularly appropriate for the decoration of this sarcophagus. The Oak, king of our indigenous trees, symbolizes strength and power. As such it was used in classic antiquity—the Jupiter tree. It is recurrent in Renaissance ornament and in the Gothic it symbolized strength, eternity, virtue and forgiveness. PL18300 for Mrs. John F. Wallace in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

SARCOPHAGI—CONTEMPORARY—SUBORDINATED CAP-STONE

Like memorials of other types, the sarcophagus today is modified in mass, simplified in detail, and the proportions trend toward a more elongated form. An outstanding refinement is the subordination of the cap-stone or entablature. This is a logical and altogether desirable modification, for with the trend toward less bulk of stone it is imperative to avoid the elaborate decoration and heavy projection of the entablature on the large Classic and Renaissance sarcophagi. This example typifies the modern treatment of the cap-stone—reduced to a simple corona with slight projection. The dentils below this cornice and the base-moulds are properly refined. PL19096 for Oscar Kohn, Esq., in Orange, N. J.

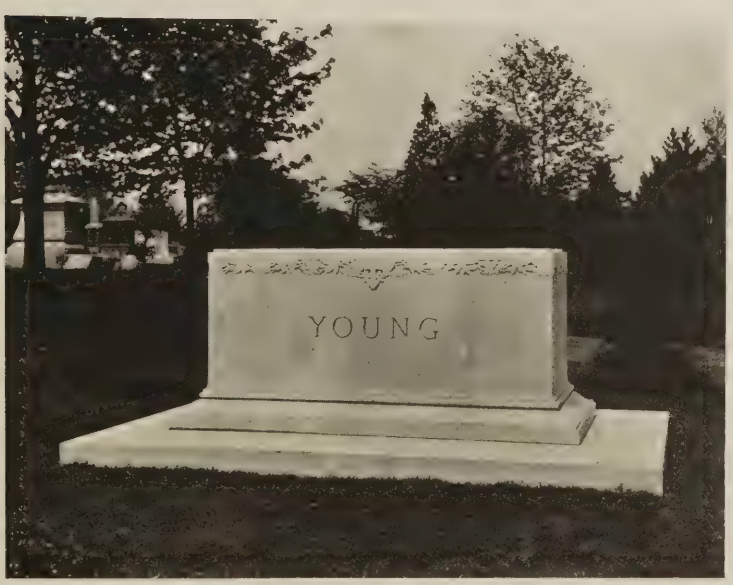
In this example, the simplification of the classic cornice or cap-stone, mentioned on the page opposite, has been carried a step farther. A string course of similar form on the Farnese Palace by San Gallo was here adapted, the band enriched with laurel carved in panels. The base or plinth also is reduced to a simple band or fillet resting upon a wide-spreading platform. Obviously, such studied simplicity of detail emphasizes the importance of good proportion; for pleasing line and mass are the salient elements in a monument so simple. PL23488 for the Estate of William M. Riker in Orange, New Jersey.

MODERN SARCOPHAGI—THE CAP-STONE MODIFIED AND OMITTED



In modifications and refinements, this stately example of the modern sarcophagus represents the ultimate development of the type here in America. The projecting cornice is omitted and in its place a band of carved laurel is used. The plinth is reduced in height but the projection is increased to effect a nice transition from the vertical surfaces to the low, wide-spreading platform. It is in this subordination of the base and elongation of the sarcophagus proper that contemporary designers have attained an elegance of line and proportions which recalls the chaste refinement and simple dignity of Greek architecture. A noteworthy detail is the superbly modelled laurel, symbol of atonement and glory, here significantly springing from the Cross. PL22912 for the Estate of Cornelius P. Young in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE POLISHED SARCOPHAGUS—WITH BASE AND MONOLITHIC

The polished surface, widely used in America during the late 19th Century, gave way to the traditional hammered or cut finish when polished granite became too common and when the demand for creative design and better architecture restored the use of mouldings which are costly to polish and decorations which are not adapted to the finish. To be sure, the combination of polished and hammered surfaces offered a solution but the contrast is too striking. The best examples are entirely polished and therefore essentially simple in design like this memorial. PL19158 for Burton S. Castles, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Now that the hammered or fine-axed surface is so prevalent in our cemeteries, the all-polished surface offers a desirable colour contrast in some sections of the grounds. Moreover the high finish used on granites of interesting texture and tone is not without an element of quiet elegance and distinction. These qualities together with the individuality of the monolithic form, discussed on the opposite page, combine to lend dignity and originality to this superbly proportioned sarcophagus. It may here be observed that bronze tablets or applied bronze letters are particularly harmonious with the dark surface of polished stone, notably when the granite has a complementary colour. PL18331 for Mrs. Charles R. Van Hise, Madison, Wisconsin.

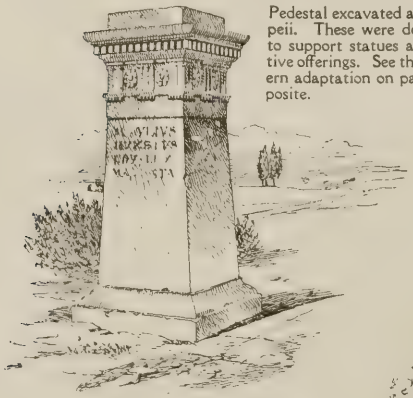
MONOLITHIC SARCOPHAGI—MODERN AND GOTHIC DETAIL

Monumental architecture in the larger sense of the word, had its origin in the primitive monoliths like those reared at Stonehenge and Carnac. And throughout the ages man has found an appeal in work wrought from a single block of stone. The unity, completeness and sense of permanence in monuments of the monolith type was mentioned on Plate XLI illustrating Tablets. The Sarcophagus, being massive in form is particularly adapted to monolithic treatment. The vanishing panel and a band of passion flowers are used to enrich the surface of this memorial. PL24183 for Mrs. C. B. Riker, South Orange, New Jersey.

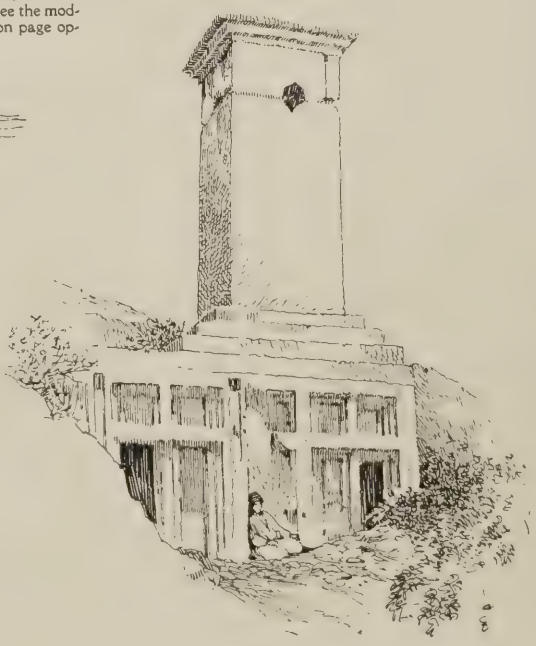
The individuality attained by omitting the base-stone, so monotonously repeated in our cemeteries, has been elsewhere referred to in this book. But individuality alone, in some cases, does not compensate for the sense of support which a base-stone affords—hence the simulated base, a slight projection just above the grade line, as in this example. Like the memorials illustrated on Plate LVIII, Gothic cusped panels are here used to enrich the surfaces. A border planting is particularly desirable in monuments of the monolithic type, effecting a nice transition from stone to lawn. PC7588 for Mrs. Hugo Ibach, in Ridgewood, New Jersey.

PEDESTAL OR SQUARE MONUMENTS

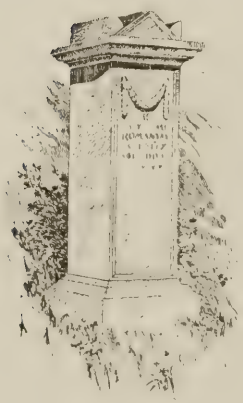
BECAUSE many of the better examples are largely adapted from ancient pedestals, notably of the Roman Era, the term Pedestal Monuments is used in referring to memorials of the type illustrated in this group, which are polygonal in form—usually four-square. The term, however, is not strictly accurate in referring to all square monuments since many memorials of this type have their source in other ancient forms, notably the primitive megalith, the tower tomb, the pagan Roman altar and also details like the post or pier in architecture. Where the site calls for a vertical composition, somewhat more massive than the erect Tablet (see Plates XXX–XXXIV), the Pedestal Monument offers a solution and one that is particularly desirable where four inscription surfaces of equal importance are desired for several branches of a family. During the closing years of the 19th century, memorials of this type were extensively used and variously treated with concave surfaces and conglomerate ornament. The better examples today adhere closely to classic prototype. They are most effective when the verticality is accentuated.



Pedestal excavated at Pompeii. These were designed to support statues and votive offerings. See the modern adaptation on page opposite.



The rock-cut tombs at Lycia, in Asia-Minor, were hewn from the mountainside about the 7th Century B.C. This example was crowned with a lofty pedestal-like tower—hence the name tower-tomb.



The stelae of Rome were often nearly square in form and together with the square altars of that era they are used today as prototypes for monuments of the pedestal type. This stelae is at Khamissa.

Four-square on plan, enriched with a Doric entablature and substantial in form, this excellent example of the pedestal type has its source in the Pompeian prototype on the opposite page. L6102 for Mrs. J. F. Stillman, Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

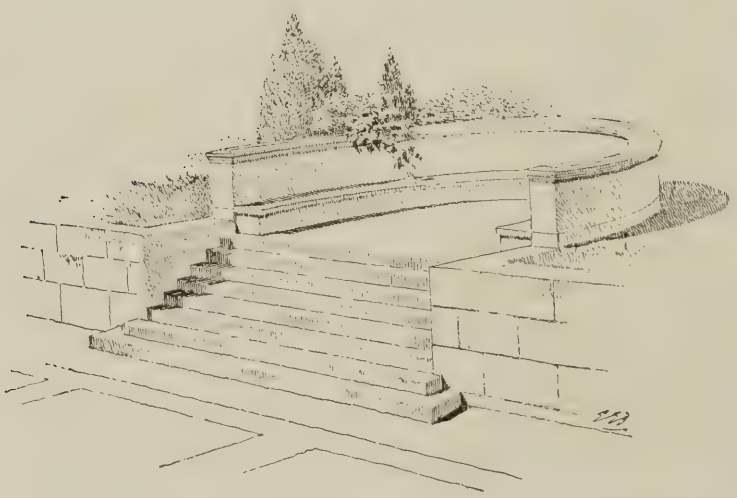
The menhirs and megaliths of primitive man are often appealing in form. Monoliths of the type here illustrated recall these primeval monuments, albeit the polishing is a modern note. PC6592 for the Estate of F. L. Upjohn, Huntington, Long Island.

The urn was often used by the ancients in funeral rites and as a repository for the ashes; hence the significance of the urn as a feature of this monument with its graceful quadrilateral pedestal—an impressive theme for the memorial. PL20325 for Carl L. Grohmann, Esq., in Hartford, Conn.

In this modern variant of the pedestal type, vertical lines are accentuated and the urn is used as a finial. The cornice, frieze and plinth are enriched with decorated mouldings of Renaissance source. Inscriptions are used on four sides. PL20447 for Donald Scott, Esq., in Orange, N. J.

THE EXEDRA

IN classical archaeology the term exedra refers specifically to a place partly enclosed and roofed over, usually opening from a colonnade and provided with seats. These exedrae were courts and lecture rooms where learned philosophers were wont to foregather, notably in the temple atrium and the palæstrae or gymnasia where disputations were held. The seats were usually semi-circular, or nearly so, and some of the most beautiful examples are found in the rounded apses of Roman basilicas. Its origin as a memorial may be traced to the funeral banquets of antiquity when the exedra was used as a commodious seat, independent of any building. Such is the triclinium funebre of the Romans—an arrangement of three couches and a table which developed into a rectangular seat or exedra. There is an acceptable dignity about the exedra as a memorial—the seat symbolizing rest and providing a place for rest and meditation. Architecturally, because of its form, scale and detail, it is the most impressive of all monuments. Obviously, a plot of considerable area is desirable, preferably situated on level ground.



Ancient exedra at Assos, a minor Greek city on the Gulf of Adramytium, explored and excavated by the Archaeological Institute of America in 1881.

In ancient Rome, the burial places of the wealthy were often planned and maintained as gardens. Indeed, a sacred place apart was often developed in the villa garden and exedrae of simple form were disposed about the grounds in proximity to the tomb. Something of this formal garden spirit is recalled in the exedra here shown—an elliptical bench with a low back or dosser, terminating in a griffin-like decoration. The griffin, in heraldry, symbolizes wisdom and watchfulness. PL22887 for Mrs. Flora M. Stransky in Hawthorne, New York.

EXEDRAE—CLASSIC DETAIL

It has been observed in this book that many monuments of antiquity resemble the temple or parts of the temple in form—the altar, gable, door and columned portico, for example, were recurrently adapted in funereal monuments. In this modern adaptation of the exedra, a columnated shrine covering a variant of the classic altar is flanked by elliptical seats with high dossers terminating in stele-like antae or terminals. The utter refinement of the classic detail and superb craftsmanship revealed in this notable work have invoked repeated comment in journals devoted to the art of working stone. TD5803 for John Anderson, Esq., in Greenwood Cemetery, New York.

The sepulchral bench or exedra of semi-circular form, like the example at Assos on Plate LXVII, has been adapted in designing this memorial. The detail, appealingly simple, is reminiscent of the Georgian or Colonial. Like ancient examples the seat is of a piece with the wall or dosser, making possible a graceful concave surface which together with the semi-circular plan attains a lovely play of light and shade. The posts or terminals are topped with urns and enriched with the family coat of arms. Alling S. DeForest, Landscape Architect. PL21560 for George Welch Olmsted, Esq., Warren, Pa.

ADAPTATIONS OF THE EXEDRA AND TRICLINIUM

This exedra is an adaptation of the Roman triclinium funebre—the rectangular type of sepulchral seat referred to in the article on Plate LXVII. Exedrae of this rectangular form were favoured by the Romans, the rear wall frequently serving to mark the boundary of the plot. A table or an altar, often used in ancient examples, is here replaced with a vase of bronze—an Attic amphora. As in the example on Plate LXVIII, a columnated shrine with Ionic Order is the central feature. L8655 for J. W. English, Esq., in Atlanta, Ga.

This design is an ingenious combination of the Roman triclinium and the elliptical exedra. The triclinium, it will be recalled, was an arrangement of three benches or couches about the table—an arrangement which later developed into the monumental triclinium funebre in stone. In this adaptation, however, Presbrey-Leland designers have used two detached benches, quadrantal in plan, with a pedestal and urn for the central feature which recalls the altar for votive offerings, often used on the Roman triclinium. PC8272 for William W. Dashiell, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

ADAPTATIONS OF THE EXEDRA AND TRICLINIUM

Exedrae of the type shown at the bottom of Plates LXVIII and LXIX attain much of their monumental impressiveness through the high wall, or dosser, back of the seat. Such a wall-like mass of stone, however, is not always desirable, notably if the plot is in an open section of the cemetery where the wall obscures a nice vista, or plots in the rear. Hence the desirability of a lighter treatment with interruptions or breaks in the wall—like the examples on this page. In the subject above a columnated canopy is thus used to preserve the vista and to lighten the composition without sacrificing impressive scale. TD5611 for Edward Zimmer, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

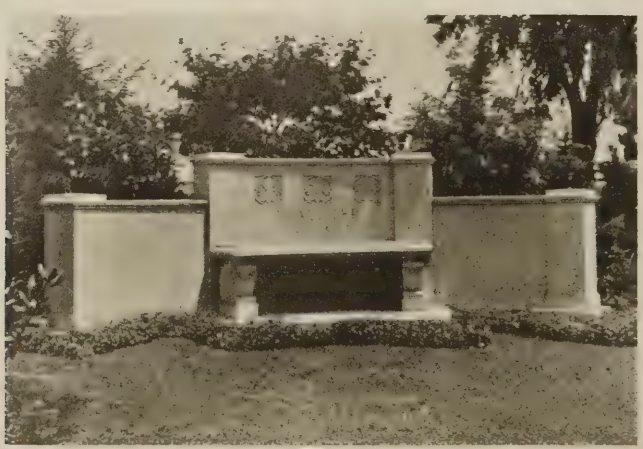
MODERN VARIANTS OF THE EXEDRA—THE GARDEN-LIKE MOTIVE

The art of the landscape architect has done much to relieve the funereal aspect of the modern cemetery, and in this respect we are returning to the garden-like cemeteries of antiquity. The memorial has an important part in this commendable movement and the use of garden accessories and details in memorial art deserves public support. Here and there throughout this book, and notably in the plates devoted to Formal Garden Themes, the work of Presbrey-Leland Studios clearly reflects this trend away from the funereal. Here, for example, a simple garden bench abuts a tablet flanked with balustrades—a seat beside the garden wall or parapet. The photograph was made before planting completed the picture. PL21110 for J. Percy Bartram, Esq., in Bridgeport, Conn.



Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless often true that beauty and individuality go hand in hand with economy. Indeed, one may go so far as to say that the resourceful designer with specialized training and knowledge can always combine the two. Here, for instance, the costly seat block of monumental exedrae has been omitted and in its place a simple garden bench is used against the spreading walls which are relatively slender pieces of stone. Thus the element of important scale and dignity is retained without involving large blocks of granite and costly labor. The result is an altogether distinctive modern type of exedra, well adapted to plots large or small. PC8375 for W. H. McAlister, Esq., in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

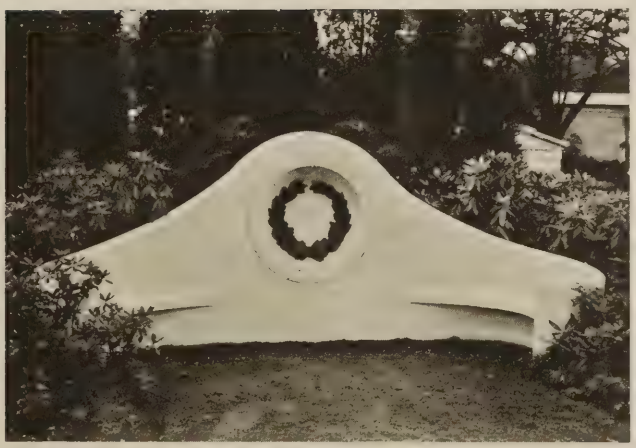
MODERN VARIANTS OF THE GARDEN BENCH AND THE EXEDRA

Another example of resourceful adaptation in designing memorials of the exedra type. The simple garden-bench, a seat-slab supported by two standards, is an appropriate motive for the memorial and as such it has been used against a screen or wall, as on the opposite page, and also free-standing, see Plate XCIII. But the garden bench of this type is not effective when the seat is elongated—there is a sense of weakness in the long span from standard to standard. Hence the introduction of a solid block between the supports which provides a surface for decoration and inscription, contributing also an element of solidity and monumental dignity. PL24690 for Miss F. L. Pagenstecher in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.



The beautiful undulate contour and flowing lines of this modern exedra have found a wide appeal. There is a quality of L'Art Nouveau in the absence of rectangular planes, the striking sweep of line and the originality of the design in which every surface is curvilinear. The seats, originating at the terminals, vanish beneath the circular niche containing a large laurel wreath of bronze. Frankly a deliberate departure from the formality of the classic exedra, the work is nevertheless in no sense a novelty, nor have dignity and restraint been sacrified in attaining a welcome quality of grace and individuality. PL-17831 for the Estate of Alf Hayman, Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

EXEDRAE ADAPTED TO SMALL PLOTS

Experiment and resourceful design are necessary in adapting the exedra to a small plot—and too often the attempt is a failure. The problem is one of composition. Horizontal lines are salient qualities of the well designed exedra. And when the length is contracted without a corresponding reduction in height, the result is awkward. The height cannot be reduced appreciably because the seat proper must remain at the established height of not less than fifteen inches. Hence the problem. An exceptional solution of this problem is illustrated above. The seat proper is pitched forward slightly and finished with a heavy band which tends to make the seat appear lower than fact, thus making possible a lower back or dosser, retaining the horizontal mass. PL24212 for Basil L. Smith, Esq., Wynnewood, Pa.

Another excellent treatment for the small exedra is attained by using the classic seat or chair in place of the longer bench or exedra. Historic prototypes for the chairs in stone are available in the Greek and Roman styles—notably the Greek judge's-chair, proedra, and the Roman state-chair, the Sella Curulis. Classic seats of this type are used for the memorial illustrated above. To attain adequate scale and monumental character, the seats are used flanking a classic stele. So skilfully are these elements in the design combined and so authentic is the detail that the composition might well be mistaken for a reproduction of some ancient monument—and yet it is a product of modern design. For Henry Blyn, Esq., in Greenwood Cemetery, New York.

THE SCREEN

IN general design of mass and detail the memorial screen very closely resembles the exedra save that the seat or bench is omitted. The more imposing examples usually feature wings or appendages flanking a Tablet, canopy or some similar central feature; while the screens of moderate cost are not unlike horizontal Tablets of important scale. Memorials of this type involve much the same requirements that apply to the exedra. They are best used on large, level plots and because they do indeed screen out the background they should be placed at the rear. The elimination of the seat obviously makes the screen somewhat less costly than the exedra and the architectural possibilities of this type have found a wide appeal. Shrubbery is an important element of effect in these and all other memorials of considerable scale.

A notable example of the monumental screen and one which clearly illustrates the similarity of this type and the exedra, Plates LXVII–LXXIII. Indeed, the architectural term "screen" has been arbitrarily adopted in memorial art to designate monuments of exedra-like form in which the seat is omitted; for there is no other distinction if we except the examples which resemble the large horizontal tablet. In this memorial screen, a shrine-like columnated canopy is flanked by low curving walls—extensions of the podium on which the columns rest. An exceptional example of harmony between monument and setting. PL20666 for Mrs. Franklin P. Frazier in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City, Walker & Gillette, Architects.

The sturdy strength and symmetry of the Greek Doric Order have been expressed in this modern memorial of the screen type. The central mass with its coupled columns recalls the facade of a temple from which the curving walls extend to embrace interments in the foreground. A sun-dial, approached by stepping stones, is placed on an axis with the center of the screen and the dial-stone is adapted from the Doric column. Noteworthy is the balance between walls and central mass. A similar design without the wings, or appendages, may be seen on Plate XCV. PL19840 for Judge Howard M. Douglass, McKeesport, Pa.

THE SCREEN—CLASSIC DETAIL

Screens of the type shown on these pages combine a wide spreading horizontal mass with some centra feature of vertical form. And it is this combination of masses which makes the screen, or the exedra of similar lines, so readily adaptable to any plot of adequate size. Moreover, the extended walls indicate the span of the plot and they convey a sense of embracing the interments, while the central tablet gives the desired scale together with an important position for the family name. This illustration shows how the wall may be kept relatively low—merely an extension of the base or podium of the tablet. The arch-like recess and the massive architectural urn are in harmony with the classic detail of the design. L8410 for E. W. Smallwood, Esq., New Bern, N. C.

Situated on a wide plot above the roadway and framed by large trees in the background, this memorial illustrates how effectively the screen fulfills the requirements of such a site, where expanse and important scale are so essential. Coupled pilasters are used on a monumental tablet crowned with a cyma shaped entablature and the flanking walls have a slight elliptical curve. Compare the use of pilasters with the coupled columns on the opposite page. The detail is Renaissance. PL23266 for Mrs. Leo A. Korper, Hartford Conn.

THE SCREEN—RENAISSANCE DETAIL

Like memorials of every group or type, the screen lends itself to innumerable variations in form and detail. Here, for example, the flanking walls are rectangular in plan with returns at each end which form a sort of enclosure—not unlike the triclinium type of exedra on Plate LXIX. This example is richly decorated in the Georgian style. Elsewhere it has been observed that memorials of this type are best located at the rear of a sizeable plot, for they do indeed screen out the background. And because there is an expanse of stonework, an appropriate background of planting is likewise important. In some instances, a few shrubs in the foreground have also been effectively employed. L8841 for Mrs. William Worthington, Washington Court House, Ohio.

SCREENS—BALUSTRADE TYPE

The screen, like the exedra, may reflect the spirit of ancient and modern garden-like cemeteries. The two examples on this page, for example, introduce balustrades—a traditional motive for the parapet of terraced gardens. In memorials of the screen type, the balustrade serves to attain the desired expanse without burdensome weight of stone. The central detail or feature of the screen illustrated above is a pedestal reminiscent of the ancient altar, often used in Roman exedrae, and notably the triclinium. TD5861 for Mrs. David Theodore Davis in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Balusters were an invention of the Renaissance and were unknown to the Greeks and Romans. Curiously enough, they were devised to support the hand rail of the screen or parapet. Obviously, the balustrade is more interesting architecturally and much lighter in mass than the solid wall generally used in memorials of the screen type. In this memorial, the balusters are placed in a compact mass in contrast to the open treatment used in the example at the top of this plate. The compact arrangement attains a sense of strength and mass which, in this case, harmonizes with the solid tablet in the center. PL21246 for C. W. Toms, Esq., at Durham, N. C.

SCREENS—COLONNADE AND PARAPET TYPE

Yet another method of avoiding a wall-like expanse of stone, in memorials of the screen type, is here employed. While the use of diminutive columns, or colonettes, is open to academic criticism, nevertheless there is ample and interesting precedent in the balustrade orders of the Renaissance—notably the Ionic colonettes in the parapet of the Palazzo Pitti in Florence. Columns thus used permit wider spacing without sacrificing the element of strength and weight. Situated on a plot that is picturesque in setting, the small colonnade here justifies itself by leaving an unobstructed view of the background. TD5805 for Mrs. William Baylis in New York City.

The rectangular walls of this screen are relieved with the triangular piercings or penetrations so commonly used by the ancient Romans in decorating the parapet. This so-called parapet motive had its origin in Roman railings formed by cross bars of wood or bronze—later cut in solid stone. It offers an excellent compromise between the austerity of solid wall and the decorative balustrade. The panel enriched with laurel and Cross, beneath the entablature, is done in Rookwood pottery, an experiment in polychrome decoration which proved successful. The semi-circular basin for planting at the base of the tablet is another noteworthy detail. L8586 for Mrs. James E. Stagg, Durham, N. C.

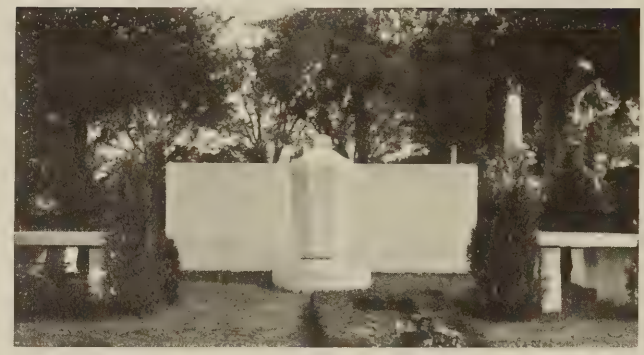
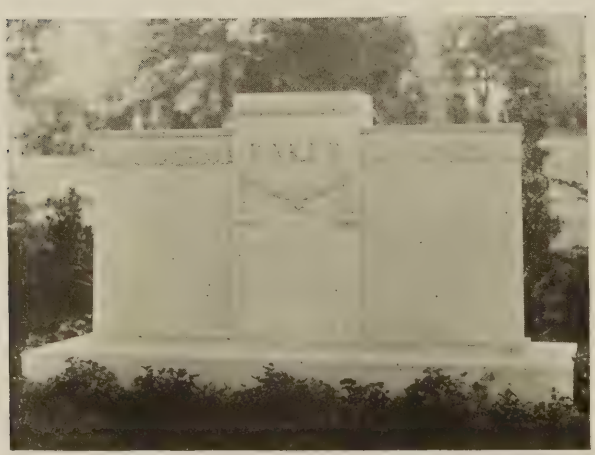
By elongating the horizontal tablet, Plates XXXV-XXXVII, a screen-like composition is attained and one that is adapted to smaller plots. Here a long monolithic tablet forms a screen which is flanked by detached semi-circular garden benches with an octagonal urn in the foreground. The ornament is of Welsh source. PL17985 for Mrs. Maude Morgan Cabell in Richmond, Va.



Similar to the exedra shown on Plate LXXI, this screen is formed by abutting slightly curved walls to a central tablet of the horizontal type. Passion Flower decoration is used. A screen of modest proportions and moderate cost. PL23696 for Mrs. G. Morgan Browne in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

THE SCREEN—ELONGATED TABLET TYPE



An architecturally interesting type of screen evolved from a combination of the vertical and the horizontal tablet. The central feature is a stele-like form, flanked by high walls which are nicely balanced in weight with the vertical element in the center. Laurel is used for the carved band and the festoon or swag. For Eugene A. Baker, Esq. in Orange, N. J.

Truly it may be said that the designer has attained the utmost in subtle grace of line and simple but significant decoration in this screen of the elongated tablet type. The curvilinear plan and the Gothic decoration bespeak the study given to memorials of moderate cost in the Presbrey-Leland studios. PL24083 for the Estate of August Klipstein in New York City.

Similar to the screens shown on the opposite page, this example has been Gothicised with cusped panels. The central tablet is of one piece with the walls into which it vanishes just above the base-stone or plinth. The wings or walls are slightly curved. PL22863 for the Estate of Benjamin F. Elgar in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE SCREEN—ELONGATED TABLET TYPE

A recent development of the screen type in which vertical lines dominate. The central tablet is adapted from the Colonial headstone, see Plate XXII. The flanking wings are relatively narrow, sustaining the vertical lines of the tablet. Note the brilliant play of light and shade in the Passion Flower carving. PL18464 for Mrs. Paul von Amsberg in New York City.

THE OBELISK

DATING back to the 4th Dynasty—some four thousand years before Christ—the Egyptian obelisk has compelled the admiration of man throughout all subsequent ages. Indeed, such is the sublimity of these towering monoliths that with prodigious labor most of them have been transported to other countries. Of some twelve which were moved to Rome, the one standing in St. John Lateran is the largest known monolithic shaft, measuring one hundred and five feet six inches in height and weighing one million twenty thousand pounds. It was the Egyptian regard for scale, balance and proportion which transformed these long uninteresting blocks of stone into noble spires by observing an ingenious relationship between diameter, shaft and the angle of the pyramidion or apex—the height being eight to eleven times the width of base. Needless to observe, these proportions cannot be bettered and modern adaptations by Presbrey-Leland adhere closely to prototype. Moreover, scale is an important element of effect in monuments of this type and the diminutive obelisk has properly become obsolete. A large plot, preferably situated on some promontory, is desirable and the obelisk should be isolated from similar monuments which might impair the scale.

The parents of Benjamin Franklin rest beneath this pyramidal shaft in the Old Granary burial ground, Boston. When obelisks are reduced in height, they should be thus given a compensating massiveness with a blunt pyramidion or apex.

Obelisk at Luxor, dating from Rameses II, 19th Dynasty. Symbolizing re-creation, the obelisks were reared in pairs before the temple. The so-called Cleopatra's Needle in New York and its companion on Thames Embankment were erected by Thothmes III, circa 1591–65 B.C., at the Temple of the Sun in sacred Heliopolis. They were removed to Alexandria by Cleopatra—hence the title "Cleopatra's Needles." The New York obelisk is sixty-nine feet six inches high, the weight approximately five hundred thousand pounds.

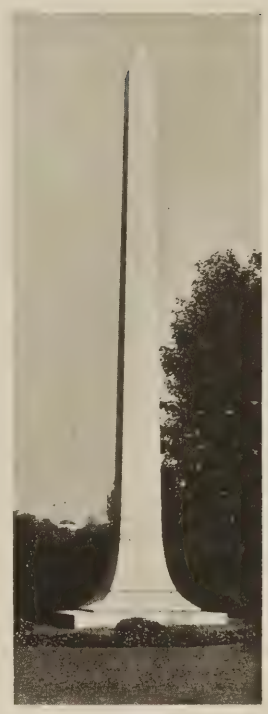
The superbly proportioned obelisk at Karnak was the prototype of this memorial. The modern concave pedestal is here appropriately enriched with the Egyptian cavetto cornice and papyrus decoration. L6303 for the Estate of H. P. Smart, Savannah, Georgia.



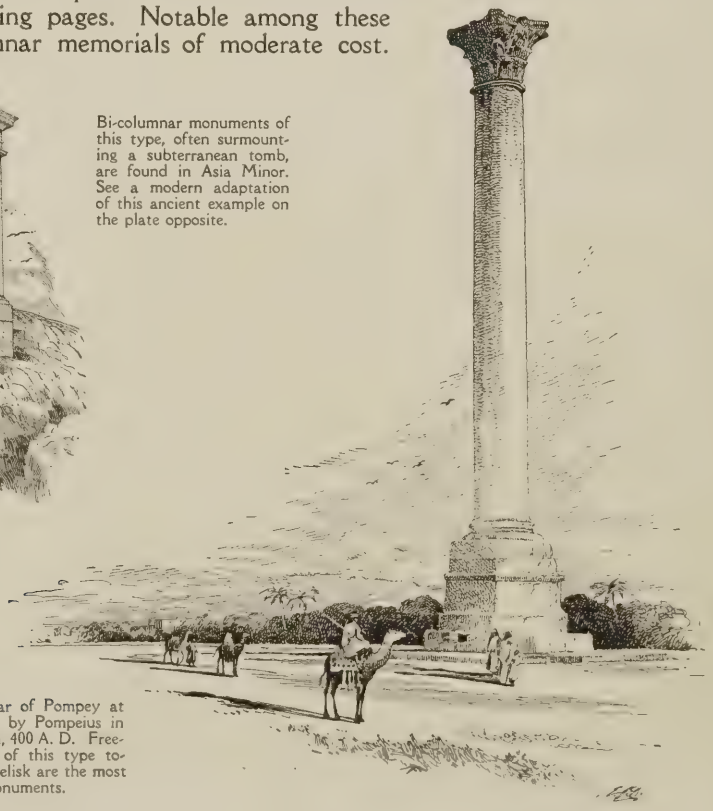
Egyptian obelisks were supported by a square block with steps. Modern adaptations usually feature the concave pedestal which effects a graceful continuity of line, accentuating the height. PC2353 for Dr. Henry E. Owen, in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Notable among American adaptations of the obelisk is this memorial on the R. J. Reynolds estate at Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The elevated terrace with balustrade and benches harmonizes with the formal garden and the obelisk is supported by a classic pedestal such as the Romans used. PL20060 for the Estate of Katherine S. Johnston, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

THE COLUMNAR MONUMENT

WHEN Solomon reared two memorial pillars thirty cubits high before the great Temple at Jerusalem, naming them Jachin and Boaz, he was observing a custom old even in that day; for recent excavations in Babylonia together with relics of Phoenicia reveal the antiquity of commemorative columns throughout the ancient East. During the archaic Greek period, memorial columns twelve to twenty feet in height were used to support statues of heroes and divinities—a favorite Ionic custom—and a number of these pillars, ex-voto, once stood upon the Acropolis. But it was during the Roman ascendancy that memorial columns were reared in vast numbers throughout the Empire. The Forum was crowded with Pillars of Victory and it was in Rome that the gigantic columna cochlis, so-called because of the spiral staircase within, was developed; notably the Column of Trajan, by the architect Apollodorus of Damascus, with its twenty-five hundred figures carved in spiral form on a shaft one hundred and twenty-eight feet high. In America, the free-standing column and monuments of the canopy type were favoured above all other columnated memorials during the latter part of the 19th Century, but the current revival of creative design has developed many variations, typical examples of which are illustrated on the following pages. Notable among these are the columnar memorials of moderate cost.

Bi-columnar monuments of this type, often surmounting a subterranean tomb, are found in Asia Minor. See a modern adaptation of this ancient example on the plate opposite.



The so-called Pillar of Pompey at Alexandria, reared by Pompeius in honor of Diocletian, 400 A. D. Free-standing columns of this type together with the obelisk are the most imposing of all monuments.

An adaptation of the bi-columnar monument in Asia Minor shown on the plate opposite—illustrating the architectural possibilities of the column in memorials of moderate cost. Adequate scale is attained without mass of stone; and the intercolumniation, or space between the columns, does not obstruct the picturesque vista beyond. PL22514 for H. L. Griggs, Esq., Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

ADAPTATIONS OF ANCIENT COLUMNAR MONUMENTS

Embraced by a monumental exedra which terminates with sarcophagi similar to the tomb of Scipio, this towering Corinthian column recalls the grandeur of Rome—"those ancient roads with tombs high verged, the solemn paths of Fame." The subjects illustrated on this page bear striking resemblance to the historic examples on the opposite plate—adaptations that bespeak scholarship and resourcefulness in design. TD3531 for Arthur Curtis James, Esq., in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, New York.

The Corinthian column with its foliated capital has been likened to a tree. How appropriately this example harmonizes with the towering trees in the background! L5649 for Mrs. William A. Fleming, Harrisburg, Pa.

A free-standing column of modest scale requires a relatively small base, and it attains architectural dignity without bulk of stone. PL17775 for the Estate of Anna S. Duhme, Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE FREE-STANDING COLUMN FOR CEMETERY PLOTS LARGE AND SMALL

Of all the elements of effect in architecture, none quite rivals the column in beauty of line and detail. The pillars of victory and the memorial columns of ancient Rome bespeak the antiquity of the column as a monument. On a site such as this, requiring important scale, what better theme for the memorial than such a lofty column, adapted from the Tower of the Winds and crowned with the votive tripod? PL21845 for the Estate of Albert F. Rockwell, Bristol, Conn.

A modern variant of the bi-columnar monument, illustrated on Plates LXXXIII and LXXXIV, in which a tablet or solid block is introduced between the columns, attaining a more massive effect and a field for inscriptions. PL19284 for the Estate of Charles Soby, Hartford, Conn.

The so-called canopy type had its origin in antiquity—a notable example remains at Dana in Syria. The baldachin or canopy of the high altar in Renaissance churches may also be adapted. This classic example, L5680, for Mrs. James R. McKeldin, Atlanta, Georgia.

COLUMNATED MONUMENTS—SHRINE-LIKE FORM AND CANOPY

Ancient Sykonian tombs often resembled the temple facade and these shrine-like monuments featured bas-reliefs of the commemorated. During the Renaissance, columnated wall tablets and tombs of this type were favoured by the great architects and sculptors. The shrine-like monument here illustrated is Renaissance in detail, featuring a bas-relief in bronze. L5237 for Albert C. Riordan, Esq., Columbus, Ohio.

A Greek Doric colonnade with a double range of columns extends across the rear of this cemetery plot, attaining monumental dignity without wall of stone. The base or stylobate is carved with inscriptions. Exceptional refinement distinguishes the detailing of columns and entablature. L9085 for Mrs. R. J. Reynolds, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

The elongated colonnade, spanning the rear of a plot, is more generally used today than the canopy which is square in plan and hence more effectively placed in the center of the lot. Moreover, a single range of columns, like the example here shown, involves less material and base area than the canopy. PL20730 for the Estate of Harriet E. Colton, Hartford, Conn.

Erected in memory of William Murphy, celebrated Irish actor, this unique monument of the columnar type is an ingenious fusion of ancient detail in a modern form—an adaptation of the pergola, see Plate XCII. The columns have their source in the 14th Century pillar-like Crosses on the Isle of Man and the Celticized decorations symbolize plays in which the actor performed. In the foreground stands a reproduction of the ancient round altar. L8751 for Mrs. J. P. Murphy in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City

Of the innumerable arches reared by the Romans, who invented this type of memorial, not a few were funerary monuments. The memorial arch with engaged columns has been here adapted for a monument of modest proportions. Renaissance detail is used. L9143 for Julius C. Schwarz, Esq., Savannah, Georgia.

Three Corinthian columns here support a semi-circular entablature forming a shrine-like recess with monumental urns flanking the steps. The architect, Mr. Joseph H. Freedlander, has introduced the complete Corinthian Order in the beautiful entablature. PL18240 for J. Herbert Ware, Esq., Vineyard Haven, Massachusetts.

COLUMNATED ARCH, SHRINE AND COLONNADE

In this colonnade, segmental in plan, a single range of eight columns is used to attain the desired expanse. The procession of columns, which are adapted from the Tower of the Winds at Athens, serves as a screen or monumental background for the plot without obscuring the vista. Such a memorial is equally interesting from all angles and the play of light and shade on the columns, the curving entablature and stylobate is a factor in the architectural beauty of the composition. PL21060 for Mrs. Charles B. Manning, Manchester, N. H.

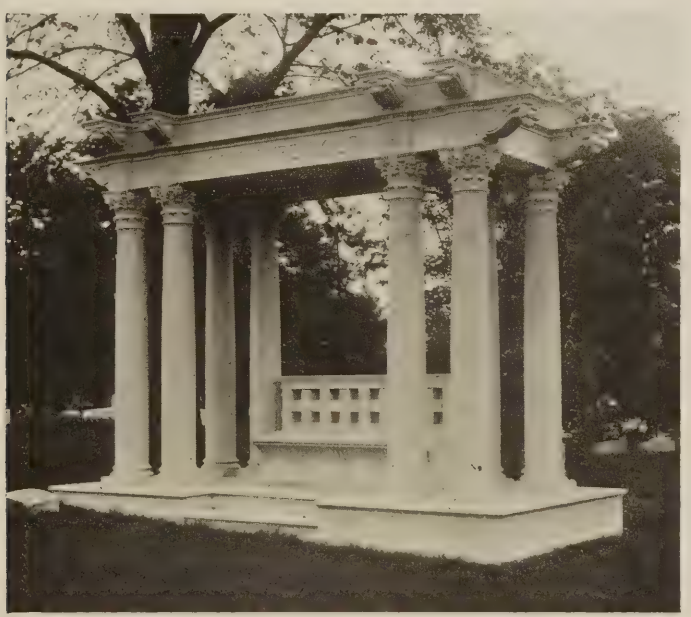
Elsewhere it has been observed that the miniature column or colonette has its limitations, albeit the architecture of the Renaissance offers ample precedent. In this subject we have another example of the permissible and successful use of the small column. Note how carefully the designer has maintained a proper relationship in scale between the columns and the entablature—a point too often ignored. In design, this tablet or screen recalls the monument of temple-form so frequently employed by the Romans. PC6874 for the Estate of James A. Bidwell, Springfield, Mass.

THE COLONETTE OR COLUMELLA USED IN MEMORIALS OF TABLET FORM

This monument of the tablet type, flanked by coupled columns, is virtually a canopy, see Plate LXXXVI, with a block or die-stone between the columns. Here again the small Doric column or columella is used with an entablature detailed in proper scale. Compare this subject with the example shown on Plate LXXXVI in which a single column is used flanking the tablet. L6312 for John W. Craddock, Esq., Lynchburg, Virginia.

THE GARDEN-TYPE MONUMENT

LANDSCAPE architects and professional horticulturists, often retained as superintendents, are transforming the American cemetery. Throughout the country there is an organized movement, sponsored by the Association of American Cemetery Superintendents, to make God's Acre a tranquil garden spot of natural beauty—an inspiration to the living. In a sense, this is a revival of the ancient garden and villa cemetery of antiquity which the early Christians adapted when they planted the burial place with trees and flowers, calling the cemetery Hortus (garden). Actuated by the ideals of this movement and inspired by the lovely landscape setting of so many modern cemetery plots, the Presbrey-Leland Studios have given especial study to memorials which in design are adapted from such garden accessories as the sun dial, pergola, garden bench, balustrade and bird-bath. A departure from the conventional and funereal monument, these memorials possess a charm, fitness and significance obvious to all who love Nature as "God's art." However modest the appropriation, or the size of the plot, some theme borrowed from the formal garden may be used as a memorial, particularly where a few shrubs can be featured.



Erected nearly a generation ago, this memorial was one of the first adaptations of the pergola as a cemetery memorial. Such is the classic beauty of the structure that it attains the monumental dignity so desirable in a cemetery memorial without the sombre funereal aspect of the conventional monument. It is this departure from the funereal that gives so wide an appeal to these Presbrey-Leland memorials adapted from the various accessories of the formal garden. L6454 for Louis N. Reibold, Esq., Dayton, Ohio.

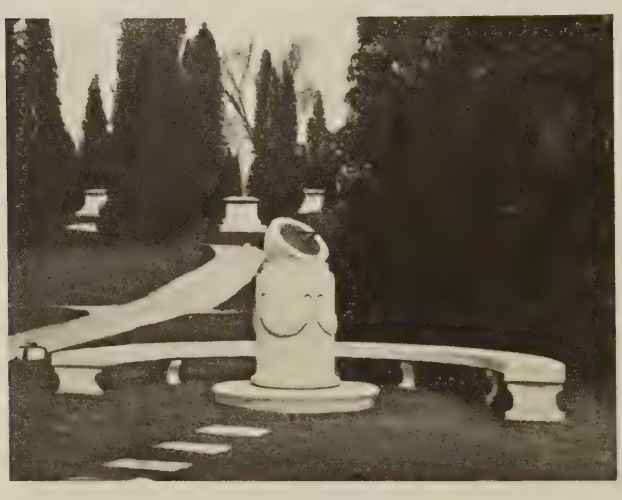
Many of our cemeteries today are bird sanctuaries and a lovely sentiment can be expressed by adopting the bird-bath for a memorial—particularly in memory of a nature-lover Such a monument serves a living function and when embraced by a semi-circular garden bench it attains adequate scale without sacrificing the garden-like atmosphere. Obviously, such a memorial should be used only in cemeteries where provision can be made for perpetual refilling of the basin. L8859 for LeRoy Myers, Esq., Savannah, Ga.

THE BIRD-BATH AND SUN-DIAL



The sun-dial—silent voice of eternal time—is peculiarly appropriate and significant as a memorial. As such it has been recurrently used in the old world, notably in the churchyards of England. The inherent fascination and sentiment associated with the sun-dial has inspired many of the poets, and their lines afford lovely inscriptions for the memorial dial. In this example, the tilted South Dial is used on a massive circular dial-stone decorated with garlands of spring flowers and embraced by a semi-circular garden bench. Stepping stones lead to the dial. L8707 for the Hon. A. R. Reichenbach, Allentown, Pa.

It has been said that the art and culture of a nation is recorded in its keramic work and that the potter, more than any artist, leaves a story of his time. Certainly the Greek vase bespeaks the truth of all this. Associated from antiquity with votive and funereal ceremony, the vase is also an important feature of the formal garden—notably vases of the krater type. How appropriate, therefore, is this krater, pedestal and garden bench used as a cemetery memorial. PL19685 for W. W. Freschl, Esq., in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

THE VASE AND PERGOLA

Like the pergola shown on Place XC, this example was the first of its type to be erected and it has deservedly earned a wide appeal. The semi-circular colonnade supporting a trellis-like lintel forms a recess in the center of which stands a monumental urn banked with trailing vines—a picturesque, withal dignified departure from the funereal monument. In later variations, the sun-dial and bird-bath have been used in place of the vase. L8143 for Bartless Arkell, Esq., Canajoharie, New York.

The well-heads or well-curbs of medieval piazzas and churches are often reproduced in modern gardens, where they may also be used as urns or vases. This adaptation of the well-head as a memorial has its prototype in the well-curb of the Piazza dei Signori in Verona. Profusely planted in summer, the basin is covered in winter with a cast bronze disc as shown in the picture. PL23515 for the Estate of Frederick Harris, Springfield, Mass.

In this original design, the dial-stone has been given a somewhat formal and monumental character without sacrificing the charm of the sun-dial. Consoles or brackets support the bronze dial and a band of roses surrounds the pedestal above the inscription. Such a memorial may be appropriately used as an individual headstone or central monument. PL23313 for Mrs. Albert Young in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Va.

THE WELL-HEAD, SUN DIAL AND GARDEN BENCH

The simple garden bench is another accessory of the formal garden which is altogether appropriate for the cemetery memorial. Like the more imposing exedra, it suggests repose and provides a place for rest and meditation. The seat block and standards in this example are somewhat heavier than they are in the conventional garden bench, contributing a desirable sense of solidity and stability. PL23424 for Carl F. Dietz, Esq., Bridgeport, Conn.

THE SCULPTURED MONUMENT

IT is sculpture, the finest and noblest of the arts, that has made Pere Lachaise, Campo Santo and other European cemeteries eternal shrines of inspiration for all lovers of beauty the world over. While commemorative sculpture has been used infrequently in the American cemetery—if we except commercial statuary—nevertheless there is evidence of a great renaissance of sculpture in this country and eminent American sculptors are turning their attention to the traditional field of commemorative art. In collaboration with foremost artists of our time the Presbrey-Leland Studios have designed many sculptured memorials, a very few examples of which are here illustrated. Needless to observe, memorials of this type involve a substantial appropriation, albeit now and then an existing model can be reproduced.

The tomb of Alfred Holland Smith, late president of the New York Central Railroad, is an example of creative design in architecture and significant form in sculpture. A screen of monumental proportions spans the plot and two bas-reliefs are carved on the monolithic facade. Crypts or loculi are located at each end of the tomb. PL21021 for Mrs. Alfred H. Smith, Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Inspiration and Achievement, the two bas-reliefs on the Smith memorial, the work of Charles Keck. The reliefs are carved in Dummerston, Vermont, granite, a medium of marble-like whiteness which yields the most subtle definition of light and shade.

Sculpture, unlike the mystic significance of symbolism, carries its message to all. Who, for example, can fail to interpret the significance of this Guardian Angel, standing before the Cross and the Book of Life which is inscribed with the words: "Now abideth Faith, Hope, Love, but the greatest of these is Love." The architectural treatment of the figure typifies the work of Charles Keck, master of the technique of modelling for sculpture in granite, the most difficult of all mediums. PL22450 for Mrs. Elizabeth M. Borges in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

Modelled by the late Philip Martiny, a favourite pupil of Augustus Saint Gaudens, this statue of the Nazarene presents Him in the attitude of supplication: "Come unto Me!" There is, too, a significance in the classic temple form of the monumental screen—a suggestion of Christianity's triumph over paganism. PC7093 for the Estate of Gullabi Gulbenkian in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

Miss Harriet Frishmuth ranks among the foremost women sculptors of the world and in this bronze for the Morton family memorial she has symbolized Aspiration in the uplifted arm and head of the figure which emerges from the deep shadow—the veil of life. The marble-like whiteness of Dummerston granite accentuates the colorful richness of the bronze. PL24165 for Miss Harriet Frishmuth, erected at Windsorville, Conn.

No theme in art or letters transcends the beauty and glory of Motherhood and because it evokes the most intensive sentiment it has often been sentimentalized at the expense of dignity and restraint. The Motherhood group of this Presbrey-Leland memorial has the restraint and architectural beauty of Greek sculpture the while retaining the inherent human appeal of the theme. Note how the bas-relief composes with the tablet,—a diagonal arrangement, the work of O. Maldarelli. PL22047 for Bertrand L. Taylor in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

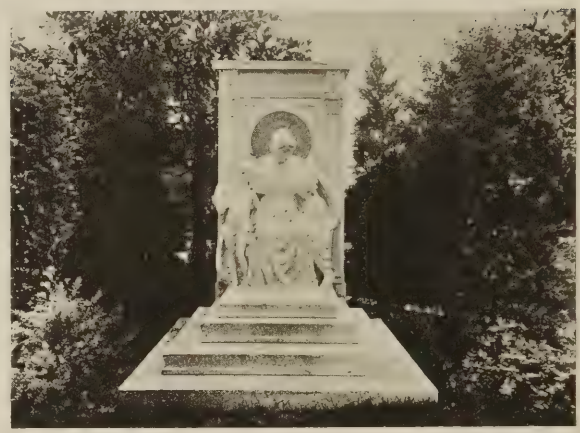
The Motherhood group in this example is carved in the round from a model made in the Presbrey-Leland studios. The actual carving was done at the site. An inlay of coloured granite forms a nimbus or halo behind the statuesque mother. L8838. One of several sculptured memorials on the family plot of the late Gen. Julian S. Carr, Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate Veterans, Durham, North Carolina.



In this memorial to a child, the sculptor and architect have with feeling expressed childhood in the chaste simplicity and directness of the sarcophagus and the bas-reliefs of the two cherubs. The memorial is appropriately inscribed with the beatitude "Blessed are the pure in heart." The bas-reliefs were modelled by O. Maldarelli. PL21764 for P. W. Thirtle, Esq., in Flushing, Long Island.

Reproductions of ancient sculpture are available, notably in the ateliers of Italian sculptors. While it behooves all art lovers to encourage contemporary artists, nevertheless an occasional reproduction is a welcome note in our cemeteries where sculpture has heretofore been largely limited to commercial statuary. Presbrey-Leland Studios designed and executed the architectural setting for this statue. L8233 for Henry G. Russell, Esq., New London, Conn.

A detail view of the statue surmounting the pedestal of this screen memorial is illustrated on the following page. Of especial interest here is the use of sculpture as a feature of the memorial—how it contributes character and significance to the work in contrast to the more conventional urn or other detail ordinarily used. L8413 for Dr. W. D. Haggard, Nashville, Tenn.

From time to time, Presbrey-Leland Studios acquire the original models of statues appropriate for cemetery memorials. The model of this example was purchased from the sculptor following an exhibition at the Salon in Paris. L8763. Reproduced for Rupert Hughes, Esq., in Kensico Cemetery, New York.

This sculptured memorial of the Renaissance intramural type has for its theme the Pure in Heart—the Angel and lilies symbolizing the Beatitude. The original was modelled in the Presbrey-Leland Studios, the finished work imported from Italy. L8575 for J. L. Sprunt, Jr., Wilmington, N. C.

The function of sculpture as an element of effecti n architecture is here strikingly illustrated. The elevated wings and the posture of the Angel Memory effect a beautiful climax to the sweeping and unsymmetrical line of the exedra, which terminates at the low end in a large urn. The statue was modelled by Mme. Marie Apel. PC7992 for the Estate of W. A. Sleicher, Troy, N. Y.

THE CIVIC AND MILITARY MEMORIAL

THE artistic merit of our public monuments today, contrasted with the mediocrities of the post-Civil War period, is due largely to the fact that as a nation we have come to recognize the importance of entrusting such projects to sculptors and architects of talent and professional training. On page 12 of this book will be found a list of celebrated artists who have entrusted the interpretation of their plans and models for public and private memorials to the architectural and sculptural carvers in the Presbrey-Leland shops. A few of these monuments are here illustrated, together with examples designed by architects on the staff of the Presbrey-Leland Studios, in collaboration with sculptors of national reputation.

The tomb of President Harding at Marion, Ohio. Circular in plan with a peripteral colonnade, the stately structure is open to the heavens, admitting a flood of light throughout the day. The material is Georgia Marble.

TOMB OF PRESIDENT HARDING

President Harding and his wife rest beneath a ledger-tomb in the center of a circular lawn, planted with shrubbery, and surrounded by the lofty columnated rotunda. A willow tree stands like a sentinel at the tomb. Henry Hornbostel, Architect. Presbrey-Leland Studios, Builders.

The war memorial at Stamford, Connecticut, was adapted from the Choragic Monument to Lysicrates at Athens. It commemorates all the wars, the principal battles of which are inscribed between the engaged columns. Bronze honor roll tablets are affixed to the dado. George A. Freeman, architect; Marie Apel, sculptor. L9725.

Beneath this monument of the shrine-like temple form, at Bardstown, Kentucky, rests the inventor of the steamboat, John Fitch. The bas-relief in bronze depicting Fitch at work on his model was reproduced from a mural in the Capitol at Washington. Elbert McGran Jackson, sculptor. Designed and executed for the War Department. PL22748.

Appropriately simple but suggesting strength and virile power, this monument commemorates John Mitchell, the beloved and universally respected leader of the coal miners. Charles Keck here depicts Mitchell the orator in an attitude of reasoning appeal and, in the shrine-like recess, the semi-circular bas-relief tells the story of a miner's day. PL19750 for the United Mine Workers of America at Scranton, Pa. Peter Sheridan, architect.

Erected in the city of Detroit in memory of Russell Alger, this memorial fountain features a statue by Daniel Chester French symbolizing the State of Michigan with a bas-relief portrait below. Henry Bacon was the architect. The fountain is most appropriate for memorials to be situated in parks and, like this example, it may be simple in detail. PC8190.

The statue of Wendell Phillips in Boston stands before a monumental stele inscribed with the immortal words, "Whether in chains or in laurels, Liberty knows nothing but victories." It is another example by the dean of American sculptors, Daniel Chester French, collaborating with the late Henry Bacon, architect. PC3410.

Of the three notable monuments by Daniel Chester French and the late Henry Bacon illustrated on this page the Lafayette Monument in Brooklyn is perhaps the most striking example of the perfect harmony between sculpture and architecture which distinguishes the work of these two famous artists. Bacon's last work with French was the Lincoln Memorial at Washington. PC5187.

The war memorial at Montclair, New Jersey, is adapted from the ancient pillar of victory. The heroic statue of Victory surmounting the shaft and the group of soldiers in action at the base are the work of Charles Keck. The monument bespeaks a studied co-ordination of architecture, sculpture and landscape. PL21397.

For the war memorial of moderate cost, a natural field boulder of pleasing form is preferable to an inadequate tablet of the cemetery type. Surmounted, as in this example, with a statue of the soldier in action, it likewise affords a note of realism which is not without merit. This study of the doughboy is the work of Pietro Montana. PL20470 for the North Arlington, New Jersey, Memorial Committee.

The ancient Greek stele was often used as a cenotaph in memory of soldiers who fell on foreign fields. The stele has been resourcefully adapted in this war memorial. The wings of the angel symbolizing Peace form the crest or anthemion ornament. An inspiring quotation from Woodrow Wilson is inscribed on the shaft. PL23945 for the Township of Little Falls, New Jersey.

This simple memorial tablet with a bas-relief "The Mother of Genius" marks the resting place of Elizabeth Arnold Poe, mother of Edgar Allen Poe, in St. Paul's Churchyard, Richmond, Va. The bas-relief was the work of Elbert McGran Jackson. Erected jointly by the Raven Society, the Actors Equity and the Poe Shrine. PL22504.

The idealism which actuated America and the sacrifices for Peace and Liberty are appropriately expressed by the Cross. This war memoria l in the village of New Canaan, Connecticut, is an adaptation of the Wayside Cross enriched with allegorical panels symbolizing the several wars in which New Canaan citizens participated. PL19415.

Another adaptation of the pillar of victory is the war memorial at Arlington, New Jersey. Here again the American ideal of Peace is emphasized, instead of war, by the attitude of the statue and an inspiring quotation concerning war against war. Three bas-reliefs depicting scenes in the World War are carved on the shaft. PL17652.

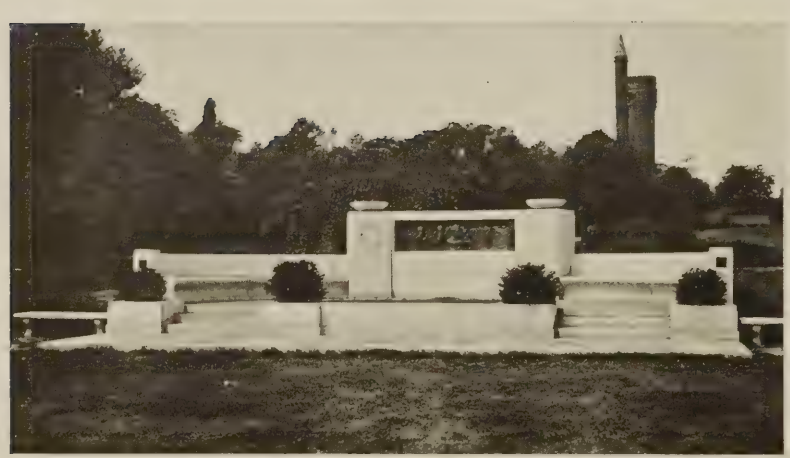
The beautification of our parks with notable works of art is commanding the attention of civic organizations and public spirited citizens. Here, for example, is a statue in Central Park of the Discus Thrower recently presented to the City of New York by Mr. and Mrs. Ery Kehaya. McKim, Mead and White, architects. PL22325.



Memorial exedra and columbarium in memory of Frederick W. Galbraith, late Commander-in-Chief of the American Legion. It stands in Eden Park, Cincinnati, Ohio. PL19100. Starret and Van Vleck, architects. The memorials erected by Presbrey-Leland Studios for the United States Government, States and Municipalities are geographically listed in the directory, page 139.

CEMETERY STRUCTURES

THE landscape beauty of modern cemeteries, with their perpetual endowment and expert supervision, has encouraged public spirited citizens to contribute memorial chapels and other structures. Registered architects on the staff of Presbrey-Leland Studios design memorial gateways, chapels, fountains, receiving tombs, and public mausoleums. This trained architectural talent together with the facilities of the Presbrey-Leland quarries, shops and construction equipment insure, at reasonable cost, that beauty of design and structural permanence so essential to cemetery buildings and adornments.

The Trustees of Fairmount Cemetery, Newark, N. J., commissioned the Presbrey-Leland Studios to design and erect this imposing public mausoleum which involved an expenditure of $1,254,000. Wm. Henry Deacy, director of architecture in the Presbrey-Leland Studios, prepared the plans. The mosaics in the chapel, shown at the right, were the work of Carlo Ciampaglia.

The Receiving Tomb is an important if not an indispensable facility of the modern cemetery. Unlike the sombre vaults of conventional design, this example resembles a private mausoleum and the Georgian style of architecture is appropriate for this building erected as a memorial to her parents by Miss Mary Elizabeth Hawley in the cemetery at Newtown, Conn. PL19888.

Memorial gateways effect an impressive approach and they remain the most favoured of all commemorative gifts to the cemetery. This example of Georgian source in design is one of three similar gateways presented by Miss Mary Elizabeth Hawley to the cemetery association at Newtown, Connecticut. PL19889.

DIRECTORY OF PRESBREY-LELAND MEMORIALS

N the following pages are listed geographically the patrons of Presbrey-Leland Studios from the year 1900 to 1928 inclusive. The directory contains approximately 30,000 names representing every state in the Union and seven foreign countries. It is published as a guide to the reader in locating relatives, friends or acquaintances who, as patrons of the Presbrey-Leland Studios, will be glad to endorse the service and ideals of the organization.
